It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

PREFACE

By ISBAEL GOLLANCZ, M.A.

THE EARLY EDITIONS

In 1609 two quarto editions of Troilus and Cressida were issued, with the following title-pages:—

- (i) "The | Historie of Troylus | and Cresseida. | As it was acted by the Kings Maiesties | seruants at the globe. | Written by William Shakespeare. | London | Imprinted by G. Eld for R. Bonian and H. Walley, and | are to be sold at the spred Eagle in Paules—Church-yeard, ouer against the | great North doore. | 1609." 1
- (ii) The | Famous Historie of Troylus and Cresseid. | Excellently expressing the beginning | of their loues, with the conceited wooing | of Pandarus Prince of Licia. | Written by William Shakespeare. | London | Imprinted by G. Eld for R. Bonian and H. Walley, and | are to be sold at the spred Eagle in Paules | Church-yeard, ouer against the | great North doore. | 1609. |

The text is identical in the two quartos, the difference being merely the variation in the title-page, and the addition of a preface to the latter edition. There is no doubt that the leaf with the preface was not in the original issue, and that the first quarto was published with the statement that it had been acted by the King's servants at the Globe. The Cambridge Editors believe that the copies with this title-page were first issued for the theater, and afterwards those with the new title-page and preface for the general readers, and they are of opinion that in this case the expression "never staled with the stage, never clapper-claw'd with the palms of the vulgar" must refer to the first appearance of the play in type, unless we suppose that the publisher was more careful to say what would recommend his book than to state what was literally true. It seems, however, scarcely plausible that the expression can refer to mere publication, and not to actual performance; it is probable that the quartos differed in some important respects from the version of the play acted by "the King's servants," and the new title-page and preface were perhaps due to some remonstrance on the part of the author or "the grand possessors."

In the First Folio Troilus and Cressida is found between the "Histories" and "Tragedies"; it is not mentioned in the Table of Contents, and the editors were evidently doubtful as to its classification. "Coriolanus," "Titus Andronicus," "Romeo and Juliet," "Troilus and Cressida," was the original order of the Tragedies, and the first three pages of the present play were actually paged so as to follow Romeo and Juliet, 1 but Timon of Athens was subsequently put in its place, and a neutral position assigned to it between the two main divisions. The Folio editors' view that the play was a Tragedy was certainly neither in accordance with the sentiment of the prologue (first found in the Folio and seemingly non-Shakespearean) and the quarto preface, which make it a comedy, nor with the title-page and running title of the quartos which treat ic as a history. Troilus and Cressida presents perhaps the most complex problem in the whole range of Shakespeare's work. It has been well described as "a History in which historical verisimilitude is openly set at nought, a Comedy without genuine laughter, a Tragedy without pathos."

There are many points of difference between the Quarto and Folio text of the play, and the Cambridge editors are probably correct in their conclusions that the discrepancies are to be explained thus:—the Quarto was printed from a transcript of the author's original MS. which was subsequently slightly revised by the author himself; before the First Folio was printed this revised MS. had been tampered with by another hand, perhaps by the writer of the prologue.

DATE OF COMPOSITION

The publication of the quartos in 1609 gives us one limit for the date of Troilus and Cressida, but (i) certain discrepancies in the text, (ii) differences of style, thought, language, and metrical qualities, and (iii) important pieces of external evidence, make it almost certain that the play passed through various stages of revision, and was in all probability composed at different times. Under (i) must be noticed that "in Act I, sc. ii, Hector goes to the field and fights, in Act I, sc. iii, after this, we find him grown rusty in the long-continued truce"; again "the rhyming couplet, V, x, 33, 34, which almost terminates the last scene, is by the Folio editors repeated at the end of Act V, sc. iii, which fact strongly suggests that Scenes vi-x are a later insertion." As regards (ii), the general style of those parts of the play dealing with the Love Story, contrasts strongly with the parts belonging to the Camp Story; the former bear the impress of Shakespeare's earlier characteristics,1 the latter of his later.

(iii) External evidence points to Shakespeare's connec-

Was this the face that launched a thousand ships And burnt the topmost towers of Ilium?

tion with the subject of Troilus and Cressida at least as early as 1599, for in the old anonymous play of Histriomastix (written by Marston and others about that year), a satirical production called forth by the famous Battle of the Theatres, associated with the quarrels of Marston, Dekker, Jonson, etc.—occurs the following burlesque passage:—

"Troy. Come, Cressida, my cresset light,
Thy face doth shine both day and night,
Behold, behold thy garter blue
Thy knight his valiant elbow wears,1
That when he SHAKES his furious SPEARE,
The foe, in shivering fearful sort,
May lay him down in death to snort.

Cress. O knight, with valour in thy face,
Here take my skreene, wear it for grace;
Within thy helmet put the same,
Therewith to make thy enemies lame." 2

There can be no doubt that we have here a travesty of an incident (cp. Act V, ii) in a play on the subject of

This passage lends color to the hypothesis that Troilus and Crossida originally had some real or supposed bearing on the theatrical quarrels of the day, Ajax representing Jonson, and Thersites standing for Dekker; "rank Thersites with his mastic jaws" has been brought into connection with Dekker's Satiromastix (1601), and Jonson's description of him in The Poetaster, "one of the most overflowing rank wits in Rome." Mr. Fleav has suggested that the "physic" given "to the great Myrmidon" (I. iii. 378) is identical with the "purge" administered by Shakespeare to Jonson in The Return from Parnassus. The early Troilus and Crossida may have contained topical allusions, but these allusions were intentionally "overlaid" in the revised form of the play; minute criticism has probably detected fossil remains of theatrical satire. Even the doubtful Prologue with "its prologue armed" seems reminiscent of the armed Prologue, in Jonson's polemical Poetaster.

It is worth while noting that the Envy Induction in the latter play imitated the old play Mucedorus (1598, 1st ed.); we have a reference to the end of Mucedorus in Troilus and Cressida, II. iii. 25,

"Devil Envy, say Amen!"

Troilus and Cressida, and that this play was by Shake-speare.

We know, from Henslowe's Diary, that about the same time, during the early part of 1599, Dekker and Chettle were preparing a play which was at first to be called "Troylles and Cresseda," but afterwards Agamemnon; and it is just possible that both this and Shakespeare's Troilus were based on some older production. Under the date of February 7, 1603, there is an entry in the Stationers' Register to "the book of Troilus and Cressida," as it is acted by "my Lord Chamberlain's servants"; the book is entered for James Roberts to be printed "when he had gotten sufficient authority for it." This must have been Shakespeare's play. Roberts did not get the necessary authority, and hence the re-entry in the Registers (January 28, 1609) before the publication of the Quarto edition. impossible to determine how far the play burlesqued in Histriomastix, the 1603 play, and the 1609 quarto, were identical.1

The safest course is to assign "circa 1599" to the play in its first form, "circa 1602" to the second and main revision, allowing for subsequent additions between the latter date and its publication in 1609. This perplexing "comedy of disillusion," with its dark irony, its wistful melancholy, its travesty of the faith of Romeo and Juliet, its depreciation of ancient heroism and medieval chivalry, its scoffing wordly wisdom, helps us perhaps to realize, somewhat at least, the deepening changes in Shakespeare's aspect of life, which lead him from farce to comedy, from comedy to somber tragi-comedy, and thence to soul-racking tragedy.

SOURCE OF THE PLOT

The main sources of Troilus and Cressida are:—(i) Chaucer's Troilus, which formed the basis of the love-story; <sup>1</sup> (ii) Caxton's Recuyell of the historyes of Troye (translated from Raoul le Fèvre's Recueil des Histoires de Troyes), <sup>2</sup> and Lydgate's Troy Book (translated from Guido di Colonna), whence Shakespeare drew his materials for the camp-story; (iii) from Chapman's Homer (Bk. I-VII, 1597) the character of Thersites was derived (vide Book II).<sup>3</sup>

DUBATION OF ACTION

It is impossible, according to Mr. P. A. Daniel, to assign more than four days to Troilus and Cressida, though certain discrepancies in Act II, sc. iii, and Act III, sc. i and iii, rather hamper the distribution of the time:—

Day 1. Act I, sc. i and ii. Interval.

Day 2. Act I, sc. iii; Act II and Act III.

Day 3. Act IV; Act V, sc. i and ii.

Day 4. Act V, sc. iii-x.

INTRODUCTION

By HENRY NORMAN HUDSON, A.M.

The first edition of this play was a quarto pamphlet of forty-six leaves, issued in 1609, with a title-page reading as follows: "The Famous History of Troilus and Cressid: Excellently expressing the beginning of their loves, with the conceited wooing of Pandarus, Prince of Licia. Written by William Shakespeare. London: Imprinted by G. Eld for R. Bonian and H. Walley, and are to be sold at the Spread Eagle in Paul's Churchyard, over against the great north door, 1609." There is also an entry in the Stationers' Register, dated January 28, 1609, and reading thus: "Richard Bonian and Henry Walley: Entered for their copy, under the hands of Mr. Segar, Deputy to Sir George Buck and Mr. Warden Lownes, a book called The History of Troilus and Cressida," Of course the first issue was made in pursuance of this entry. And that issue is specially remarkable in being accompanied with a sort of prefatory address to the reader by the editor or publisher; which address may be seen at the end of this Introduction. In that address are two points of information which should be noticed here. The first is, that the play was then new, and had never been publicly acted; the words being,—"You have here a new play, never stal'd with the stage, never clapper-claw'd with the palms of the vulgar." And again: "Not being sullied with the smoky breath of the multitude." The other point is, that the publishing of the play was unauthorized and surreptitious. writer bids his readers,—"Thank fortune for the scape it hath made amongst you; since by the grand possessors' wills I believe you should have pray'd for it, rather than been pray'd." The "grand possessors" were doubtless the proprietors of the Globe Theater, in whom the rights of ownership were vested; and how strong their interest was in withholding Shakespeare's plays from the press, appears in that only this play and King Lear were published between 1603 and the Poet's death, and probably both of these without the owners' consent.

The edition of 1609, it seems, went to a second issue in the course of the same year; the prefatory address being withdrawn, and the title-page changed so as to read thus: "The History of Troilus and Cressida: As it was acted by the King's Majesty's servants at the Globe." We speak of these as two issues of one and the same edition, because the text of both copies is in all respects the same, with the exception of two or three typographical corrections. It will be observed, no doubt, that the play must have been acted on the public stage soon after the first issue, and that this was a good reason for suppressing the editor's preface and changing the title-page in the second.

How Bonian and Walley should have obtained their copy for the press, is a question more likely to be raised than satisfactorily answered. From the title-page to the quarto edition of King Lear, which was issued in 1608, we learn that that play was acted "before the King's Majesty at Whitehall upon St. Stephen's night in Christmas holidays. by his Majesty's servants playing usually at the Globe." It is not unlikely that, before the first issue, Troilus and Cressida had been acted at the same place and by the same persons; as this would nowise conflict with the statement, in the preface, of its being "a new play, never stal'd with the stage," nor "sullied with the smoky breath of the multitude." But whether the play had been so acted or not, we can easily conceive how it might have got into the publishers' hands without the owners' consent. For copies of it must of course have been given out to the players some time before the day of performance. And so the most likely account of "the scape it hath made amongst you' seems to be, that the copy leaked somehow through the players' hands, and was put through the press before it could be got ready for the stage.

In both issues of the quarto edition, Troilus and Cressida is called a "history"; while in the prefatory address it is reckoned amongst the Poet's "comedies." In the folio of 1623, where it was next published, it was called a "tragedy." The circumstances of its appearance in the latter edition are in some respects quite peculiar. It is not included in the list of plays prefixed to the volume, and is printed without any numbering of the pages, save that the pages of the second leaf are numbered 79 and 80. that edition the plays are distributed under the three heads of Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies. Each of these divisions is paged by itself, and in that of Tragedies the paging begins with Coriolanus. Troilus and Cressida is placed between the Histories and Tragedies, with nothing to mark which of the two divisions it falls under, except that in the general title it is called a "tragedy." From its not being included in the list of plays nor in the paging, some have inferred that its insertion in the folio was an after-thought; and that either the existence of it was unknown or unregarded by the editors, or else the right of printing it was withheld from them, till all the rest of the volume had been made up and struck off. We do not believe any thing of this; the most probable explanation of the whole matter being, in our judgment, that the editors of the folio simply did not know where to class the play. Nor has any headway since been made towards clearing up the puzzle that seems to have proved too much for them. The play is a perfect non-descript, and defies the arts of classification: it may with equal propriety be included in either of the three divisions, or excluded from them all.

The old copies of the play, both quarto and folio, are without any marking of the acts and scenes, save that at the opening we have "Actus Primus. Scena Prima." That a copy of the quarto was used in printing the folio, is probable, as several misprints of the former are repeated in the latter; while, again, each copy has several passages that are wanting in the other; which shows that in making up the folio recourse was had to some authority besides the quarto. There are also divers other variations in the two copies; which puts us occasionally upon a choice of readings. The printing, too, of both copies abounds to an unusual extent in errors, though most of them are of a kind easily corrected.

Nearly all the critics have remarked upon the great inequalities of style and execution met with in this play. In fact, scarce any of the Poet's plays show more of ripeness or more of greenness in his art, than we find in different parts of this: it has some of his best work, and some of his worst; insomuch that Coleridge, in attempting a chronological classification of his plays from the internal evidence, at one time set this down to the third epoch of the Poet's authorship, when with "all the world of thought" there were still joined "some of the growing pains, and the awkwardness of growth"; and at another time, to the fifth and last epoch, when his genius was moving in its highest cycle.

Nearly connected with this point is the fact that the play is singularly defective in unity of interest and impression: there is little constancy or continuity of purpose or design apparent in it; where the real center of it lies, what may be the leading and controlling idea, nobody can tell. The characterization, individually regarded, is of a high order; but there is almost no composition among the characters; and, as they do not draw together towards any perceptible conclusion, we cannot gather why they should be consorted as they are. And the play abounds most richly, withal, in the far-sighted eloquence of moral and civil wisdom and discourse, such as carries our thoughts into the highest regions of Hooker and Burke; moreover, it is liberally endowed with noble and impressive strains of poetry; yet one is at loss to conceive why such things should be here, for a smuch as the use of them does not seem to be regulated by any final cause, or any uniform law. So that, though ranking among the Poet's greatest and best efforts in respect of parts, still as a work of art the piece is exceedingly lame, because the parts do not duly converge in any central purpose, and so round up into an artistic whole. In other words, the whole does not, as in an organic structure, give form and law to the parts, so as to yield an adequate reason why they are so and not otherwise.

All which naturally starts the question whether the play were originally written as we have received it; or whether, in its present shape, it were an improvement on some older drama; and, if so, whether the older drama were by Shakespeare or some other hand. We have seen that in the prefatory address of the first issue it was said to be a "new play." We see no cause to question the accuracy of this statement, as it probably need not be held to infer any thing more than that the play was new in the form it then bore. In several instances, the Poet's earlier pieces are known to have been afterwards rewritten, enlarged, and replenished with the strengths and graces of his riper vears. This was the case with Love's Labor's Lost, Romeo and Juliet, and Hamlet, among those published during the author's life; and it is all but morally certain that of those first published in 1623 All's Well that Ends Well, Cumbeline, and perhaps some others, underwent a similar process.

The inequalities of workmanship in Troilus and Cressida are so like those in the plays thus rewritten, as to suggest a common cause. And the argument growing from thence is not a little strengthened by an entry in the Stationers' Register, dated February 7, 1603: "Mr. Roberts: The book of Troilus and Cressida, as it is acted by my Lord Chamberlain's men." The "Lord Chamberlain's men" were the company to which Shakespeare belonged, and which, being specially licensed by King James soon after his accession, in the spring of 1603, became known as "His Majesty's servants." "Mr. Roberts," no doubt, is the James Roberts whom we have already met with as the publisher of the second quarto editions of A Midsummer Night's Dream and The Merchant of Venice. In both of those cases there is good reason to think that his issues were unauthorized. For The Merchant of Venice was entered by him in the Stationers' Books in July, 1598, with the proviso, "that it be not printed by the said James Roberts, without licence first had from the right honourable the Lord Chamberlain." Something over two years later the same play was entered again by Thomas Heyes, and published soon after the entry. In the course of the same year an edition was put forth by Roberts. In like manner, A Midsummer Night's Dream was entered by Thomas Fisher, and was published in 1600; and an edition was published by Roberts the same year, without any entry at the Stationers'. Which may sufficiently account for the fact, if it be a fact, that there was no edition of Troilus and Cressida consequent upon the entry by Roberts in 1603.

Still there is some question whether the play entered in 1603 were Shakespeare's; the only ground of such question being, that in Henslowe's Diary, under date of April and May, 1599, are found several entries of money paid to Dekker and Chettle in earnest of a play which they were then writing, entitled Troilus and Cressida, for the rival company known as "the Earl of Nottingham's players." It appears, however, that in the title of this play "Agamemnon" was afterwards substituted for "Troilus and Cressida." But even if such had not been the case. there is very little likelihood that the "Lord Chamberlain's men" would have used on their boards the play of a rival company. The probability seems to be, that each company had a play on the same subject; one of them, perhaps, being written in a spirit of competition with the other: for it often happened that, in case of a play succeeding on either stage, the other sought to turn such success to its own account by getting up something adapted to catch hold of and engage the popular interest thus awakened.

The conclusion, then, which we would draw from this whole statement is obvious enough; namely, that Shake-speare's Troilus and Cressida was originally written and acted before the spring of 1603; that some years later, probably in 1608, it was rewritten, enlarged, and in parts transfigured with the efficacy of the Poet's riper mind and more philosophical cast of thought; and that this revision was with a view to the play's being brought out anewon the stage, and so was the cause of its being set forth as a "new play" in the edition of 1609.

Four authorities are principally named as having been drawn upon by Shakespeare for the materials of this These are Chaucer's Troilus and Creseide; The History of the Destruction of Troy, translated from the French by Caxton; The Troy Book of Lydgate; and Chapman's translation of Homer. The first seven books of Chapman's version were published in 1596, and the next twelve books not far from two years afterwards: the whole twenty-four books, entitled "The Iliads of Homer, Prince of Poets,-Done according to the Greek, by George Chapman," were not published before 1603, probably not much before 1611, the first edition being undated. Shakespeare and Chapman were well known to each other, and probably stood on terms of personal friendship and intimacy, being members of the same great senate of genius. It was from Chapman most likely that the Poet derived in the main his ideas of the Greek and Trojan heroes, as their several characters are developed in the council and in the field. it is quite remarkable that the influence from this quarter is most clearly traceable in precisely those parts of the play which convey the strongest relish and impress of the Poet's riper mind and larger thought; insomuch as to favor the notion of their being the results of after-thought grafted upon the stock of an earlier production. smally probable, not to say certain, that Chapman furnished the hints for the delineation of Thersites, there being nothing of him to be found in the other authorities mentioned. We say hints; for such are the most that could have been furnished by the Thersites of Homer towards the Thersites of Shakespeare, the character of the latter having all the freshness and spirit of an original conception; so that it seems as though the Poet had transfused his whole intellectual make-up into the person of a snarling, scurrilous, profane railer, with a body just fitted to the essential ugliness enshrined within it. There was, indeed, before the writing of this play, an old Interlude on the stage, wherein Thersites figured as one of the persons; but there is no likelihood of any thing having been borrowed from it by the Poet.

In all that regards the action of the hero and heroine, the main staple and ground-work of the play were unquestionably taken from Chaucer's poem, though most of the Poet's editors have ignored the fact, if indeed they were not ignorant of it. It is well known that of the particular story of Troilus and Cressida no traces are found in any of the classic writers. Caxton and Lydgate indeed have something of it, but not in a form to have served the design of the play; while the part of Pandarus, whose character and doings are interwoven with the whole course of the story as represented by the Poet, is wholly wanting in them, except a single mention of him by Lydgate, who refers to Chaucer as his authority. So that Chaucer's poem was the only work accessible to Shakespeare, that could have supplied the material for this part of the drama. Moreover, we have elsewhere divers clear and unmistakable notices of Shakespeare's having drunk largely from this "well of English undefiled": many tokens of a close acquaintance with "the father of English poetry" occur in his plays. Before leaving this point, it should be observed that in Chaucer's poem Cressida is represented with a purity and loftiness of character not consistent with the actions there ascribed to her. Shakespeare borrowed the main points of her action, and made her character conformable thereto. The character of Troilus, with its heroic ardor and constancy of soul, is substantially the same in the play as in the poem.

There remain but certain accessories of the play to be set down to the credit of Lydgate and Caxton. It will be seen, also, that the marks of paternity are in them so strong as to preclude all question touching the sources of them. The History of the Destruction of Troy, translated by Caxton from the Recueil des Histoires de Troye of Raoul le Fevre, appeared in 1471. In Shakespeare's time it had been modernized, and was very popular, as is shown by the fact of its passing through six editions by the year 1619. The History, Siege, and Destruction of Troy, commonly distinguished as The Troy Book of Lydgate, came from the press in 1513. In Shakespeare's time, however, it was fast sinking out of use, being written in verse, so that it could not pass for prose, while at the same time the verse was so rude and stumbling that it could not go as poetry. For our part, we can discover no sure signs of the Poet's having drawn from this source at all; there being, we believe, nothing common to him and Lydgate, but what is also common to Lydgate and Caxton. Perhaps we ought to add that the material of these works was nowise original with the writers named; most if not all of it being traceable to sources still more remote. But, inasmuch as there is no likelihood of the Poet's having gone beyond them, it would be beside our purpose to do so. We therefore dismiss this part of the subject by mentioning, that A proper Ballad, dialoguewise, between Troilus and Cressida was entered on the Stationers' Books in 1581, by Edward White; which may possibly have furnished the Poet a hint for working the story into a drama.

For reasons partly stated already, the play of Troilus and Cressida has been a standing poser to criticism. It is indeed a wonderful production,—wonderful alike for the profusion from the subtlety, and of wisdom crowded into the subtlety, and lifelikeness of the individual characterization. And so far nearly all the later and better critics are substantially agreed. On the other side, one cannot discover what the Poet is driving at: marvelous as are the details in spirit and variety of life, they do not seem to grow from any common principle or purpose; and it is only in the light of such principle or purpose that they can receive a logical statement and interpretation. Hence there has grown a remarkable diversity, not to say oppugnancy, of criticism respecting it; and some of the higher critics have employed what seems to us a great over-refinement of speculation, in order to make out some one idea under which the details might all be artistically reduced.

Schlegel led off in this super-subtlety of critical speculation. His idea of the work is so ingenious that one cannot but wish it might hold true, and is stated thus: "It seems as if the Poet here for once wished, without caring for theatrical effect, to satisfy the nicety of his peculiar wit, and the inclination to a certain guile, if I may say so, in the characterization. The whole is one continued irony on that crown of all heroic tales, the tale of Troy. The contemptible nature of the origin of the Trojan war, the laziness and discord with which it was carried on, so that the siege was made to last ten years, are only placed in clearer light by the noble descriptions, the sage and ingenious maxims with which the work overflows, and the high ideas which the heroes entertain of themselves and each other."

The same notion is worked up by Ulrici to a pitch bordering, as it seems to us, upon the ludicrous. "The ground-idea," says he, "which, in our opinion, it is the aim of Troilus and Cressida to bring under the comic view, is the opposition, especially in the moral aspect, between the character and habits of Grecian antiquity, and the principles of modern Christendom. To exhibit this opposition he takes the very basis of the former,—the Trojan war,—but throws its ideal import into the back-ground, and sketches it merely in its matter-of-fact details, thou without some slight modifications. The Homeric hero is stripped bare of his poetic ideality; while, on the other hand, his moral weaknesses, which Homer, in the true spirit of a Greek, represents for the most part as virtues, are brought forward in the strongest light. sighted Shakespeare certainly did not mistake as to the beneficial effects which an acquaintance with the high culture of antiquity had produced and would produce on the mind of Christian Europe. But he saw the danger that would grow from an excessive admiration of it; that it would generate the lowest type of moral and religious corruption; which result may indeed be actually discerned in the eighteenth century. It was in this prophetic spirit that he wrote this deeply-significant satire on the Homeric He did not wish to bring down the high, or to make the great little; still less, to attack the poetical worth of Homer, or of heroic poetry in general: his aim was to warn against that idolatry of them which men are so apt to fall into; and at the same time to press home upon them the universal truth, that every thing merely human, however glorified with the halo of a poetic ideality and a mythical past, is yet very small, when viewed in the light of a pure moral ideality."

But this view probably has its best expounder in the genial and excellent critic of Knight's edition of Shakespeare. "The play," says this writer, "cannot be understood upon a superficial reading: it is full of the most subtle art. We may set aside particular passages, and admire their surpassing eloquence, their profound wisdom; but it is long before the play, as a whole, obtains its proper mastery over the understanding. It is very difficult to define what is the great charm and wonder of its entirety. To us it appears as if the Poet, without the slightest particle of presumption, had proposed to look down upon the Homeric heroes from an Olympus of his own. He opens the Iliad, and there he reads of 'Achilles' baneful wrath.' A little onward he is told of 'the high threatening' of 'the cloud-gatherer.' The gods of Homer are made up of human passions. But he appears throned upon an eminence, from which he can not only command a perfect view of the game which men play, but, seeing all, become a partisan of none,—perfectly cognizant of all motives, but himself motiveless. And yet the whole representation is true, and it is therefore genial. It is not a travesty of Homer, or of Nature. The heroes of the Iliad show us very little of the vulgar side of human life,-not much even of the familiar: but the result is, they cease to be How this is attained, is the wonder. heroic. The whole tendency of the play,—its incidents, its characterization, is to lower what the Germans call herodom."

Wishing well to this view, we have therefore given it whatsoever advantage may be derived from the ingenuity and eloquence of its best advocates; but have to confess, notwithstanding, our inability to find any sure foothold in There is to our mind a seriousness and reality in the characterization of the Greek and Trojan chiefs, and a depth and breadth of philosophic discourse and of practical wisdom attributed to some of them, which will hardly consist with the idea of their having been conceived and wrought out in a spirit of mock-heroic or burlesque. that our conclusion agrees substantially with that reached by the more sober and not less penetrating judgment of Mr. Verplanck, that "the high philosophy and the practical ethics of a large portion of the dialogue are quite incompatible with any such design."

The very perplexity in which the scope and design of this play are wrapped seems to have made it an uncommonly fertile theme to the critics. It was partly for this reason, perhaps, that the subject drew from Coleridge one of the finest specimens of philosophic criticisms to be met with in the language, or in any language. To omit any thing of it in this edition, would not be doing right: we therefore subjoin it entire:

"The Troilus and Cressida of Shakespeare can scarcely be classed with his dramas of Greek and Roman history; but it forms an intermediate link between the fictit and Roman histories, which we may call legendary dramas, and the proper ancient histories; that is, between the Pericles or Titus Andronicus, and the Coriolanus or There is no one of Shakespeare's plays Julius Casar. The name and the remembrances harder to characterize. connected with it prepare us for the representation of attachment no less faithful than fervent on the side of the vouth, and of sudden and shameless inconstancy on the part of the lady. And this is indeed as the gold thread on which the scenes are strung, though often kept out of sight and out of mind by gems of greater value than itself. But, as Shakespeare calls forth nothing from the mausoleum of history, or the catacombs of tradition, without giving or eliciting some permanent and general interest, and brings forward no subject which he does not moralize or intellectualize; so here he has drawn in Cressida the portrait of a vehement passion, that, having its true origin and proper cause in warmth of temperament, fastens on, rather than fixes to, some one object by liking and temporary preference.

> "'There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip, Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look out At every joint and motive of her body.'

"This Shakespeare has contrasted with the profound affection represented in Troilus, and alone worthy the name of love;—affection, passionate indeed,—swollen with the confluence of youthful instincts and youthful fancy, and growing in the radiance of hope newly risen, in short, enlarged by the collective sympathies of nature;—but still having a depth of calmer element in a will stronger than desire, more entire than choice, and which gives permanence to its own act by converting it into faith and duty. Hence, with excellent judgment, and with an excellence higher than mere judgment can give, at the close of the play, when Cressida has sunk into infamy below retrieval and beneath hope, the same will, which had been the substance and basis of his love, while the restless pleasures and passionate longings, like sea-waves, had tossed but on its surface,—this same moral energy is represented as snatching him aloof from all neighborhood with her dishonor, from all lingering fondness and languishing regrets; whilst it rushes with him into other and nobler duties, and deepens the channel which his heroic brother's death had left empty for its collected blood. Yet another secondary and subordinate purpose Shakespeare has inwoven with his delineation of these two characters,—that of opposing the inferior civilization, but purer morals, of the Trojans to the refinements, deep policy, but duplicity and sensual corruptions of the Greeks.

"To all this, however, so little comparative projection is given,-nay, the masterly group of Agamemnon, Nestor, and Ulysses, and, still more in advance, that of Achilles, Ajax, and Thersites, so manifestly occupy the fore-ground, -that the subservience and vassalage of strength and animal courage to intellect and policy seems to be the lesson most often in our Poet's view, and which he has taken little pains to connect with the former more interesting moral impersonated in the titular hero and heroine of the drama. But I am half inclined to believe that Shakespeare's main object, or shall I rather say, his ruling impulse, was to translate the poetic heroes of paganism into the not less rude, but more intellectually vigorous and more featurely warriors of Christian chivalry; and to substantiate the distinct and graceful profiles or outlines of the Homeric epic into the flesh and blood of the romantic drama; in short, to give a grand history-piece in the robust style of Albert Durer.

"The character of Thersites, in particular, well deserves a more careful examination, as the Caliban of demagogic life;—the admirable portrait of intellectual power deserted by all grace, all moral principle, all not momentary impulse,—just wise enough to detect the weak head, and fool enough to provoke the armed fist of his betters: one whom malcontent Achilles can inveigle from malcontent Ajax, under the one condition that he shall be called on to do nothing but abuse and slander, and that he shall be allowed to abuse as much and as purulently as he likes, that is, as he can;—in short, a mule,—quarrelsome by the original discord of his nature,—a slave by tenure of his own baseness,—made to bray and be brayed at, to despise and be despicable. 'Aye, Sir, but, say what you will, he is a very clever fellow, though the best friends will fall out. There was a time when Ajax thought he deserved to have a statue of gold erected to him; and handsome Achilles, at the head of the Myrmidons, gave no little credit to his friend Thersites.'"

We will close up the subject with some remarks by William Godwin, in his Life of Chaucer, where he discusses, with much judgment and discrimination, the comparative treatment of the same story by the two great masters of English poetry:

"Since two of the greatest writers this island has produced have treated the same story, each in his own peculiar manner, it may be neither unentertaining nor uninstructive to consider the merit of their respective modes of composition as illustrated in the present example. Chaucer's poem includes many beauties, many genuine touches of nature, and many strokes of an exquisite pathos. is on the whole, however, written in that style which has unfortunately been so long imposed upon the world as dignified, classical, and chaste. It is naked of incidents, of ornament, of whatever should most awaken the imagination, astound the fancy, or hurry away the soul. the stately march of a Dutch burgomaster as he appears in a procession, or a French poet as he shows himself in It reminds one too forcibly of a tragedy of Racine. Every thing partakes of the author, as if he thought he should be everlastingly disgraced by becoming natural, inartificial, and alive. We travel through a work of this sort as we travel over some of the immense downs with which our island is interspersed. All is smooth. or undulates with so gentle and slow a variation as scarcely to be adverted to by the sense. But all is homogeneous and tiresome; the mind sinks into a state of aching torpidity; and we feel as if we should never get to the end of our eternal journey. What a contrast to a journey among mountains and valleys, spotted with herds of various kinds of cattle, interspersed with villages, opening ever and anon to a view of the distant ocean, and refreshed with rivulets and streams; where if the eye is ever fatigued, it is with the boundless flood of beauty which is incessantly pouring upon it! Such is the tragedy of Shakespeare.

"The great beauty of this play, as of all the genuine writings of Shakespeare, beyond all didactic morality, beyond all mere flights of fancy, and beyond all sublime,— a beauty entirely his own, and in which no writer ancient or modern can enter into competition with him,—is that his men are men; his sentiments are living, and his characters marked with those delicate, evanescent, undefinable touches, which identify them with the great delineation of nature. The speech of Ulysses in Act III, sc. iii, when taken by itself is purely an exquisite specimen of didactic morality; but when combined with the explanation given by Ulysses, before the entrance of Achilles, of the nature of his design, it becomes an attribute of a real man, and starts into life.

"When we compare the plausible and seemingly affectionate manner in which Ulysses addresses himself to Achilles, with the key which he here furnishes to his meaning, and especially with the epithet 'derision,' we have a perfect elucidation of his character, and must allow that it is impossible to exhibit the crafty and smooth-tongued politician in a more exact or animated style. The advice given by Ulysses is in its nature sound and excellent, and in its form inoffensive and kind; the name therefore of 'derision,' which he gives to it, marks to a wonderful degree the cold and self-centered subtlety of his character.

"The whole catalogue of the Dramatis Personæ in the play of Troilus and Cressida, so far as they depend upon a rich and original vein of humor in the author, are drawn with a felicity which never was surpassed. The genius of Homer has been a topic of admiration to almost every generation of men since the period in which he wrote. But his characters will not bear the slightest comparison with the delineation of the same characters as they stand in Shakespeare. This is a species of honor which ought by no means to be forgotten when we are making the eulogium of our immortal bard, a sort of illustration of his greatness which cannot fail to place it in a very conspicuous light. The dispositions of men perhaps had not been sufficiently unfolded in the very early period of intellectual refinement when Homer wrote; the rays of humor had not been dissected by the glass, or rendered perdurable by the rays of the Poet. Homer's characters are drawn with a laudable portion of variety and consistency; but his Achilles, his Ajax, and his Nestor are, each of them, rather a species than an individual, and can boast more of the propriety of abstraction, than of the vivacity of the moving scene of absolute life. The Achilles, the Ajax, and the various Grecian heroes of Shakespeare, on the other hand, are absolute men, deficient in nothing which can tend to individualize them, and already touched with the Promethean fire that might infuse a soul into what, without it, were lifeless form. From the rest perhaps the character of Thersites deserves to be selected, (how cold and school boy a sketch in Homer!) as exhibiting an appropriate vein of sarcastic humor amidst his cowardice, and a profoundness of truth in his mode of laying open the foibles of those about him, impossible to be excelled.

"One of the most formidable adversaries of true poetry, is an attribute which is generally miscalled dignity. Shakespeare possessed, no man in higher perfection, the true dignity and loftiness of the poetical afflatus, which he has displayed in many of the finest passages of his works with miraculous success. But he knew that no man ever was, or ever can be, always dignified. He knew that those subtler traits of character, which identify a man, are familiar and relaxed, pervaded with passion, and not played off with an eye to external decorum. In this respect the peculiarities of Shakespeare's genius are nowhere more forcibly illustrated, than in the play we are here considering. The champions of Greece and Troy, from the hour in which their names were first recorded, had always worn a certain formality of attire, and marched with a slow and measured step. No poet, till this time, had ever ventured to force them out of the manner which their epic creator had given them. Shakespeare first supplied their limbs, took from the the classic stiffness of their gait, and enriched them with an entire set of those attributes which might render them completely beings of the same species with ourselves."

A NEVER WRITER, TO AN EVER READER: NEWS

Eternal reader, you have here a new play, never staled with the stage, never clapper-clawed with the palms of the vulgar, and yet passing full of the palm comical; for it is a birth of your brain, that never undertook any thing comical vainly: and were but the vain names of comedies changed for the titles of commodities, or of plays for pleas, you should see all those grand censors, that now style them such vanities, flock to them for the main grace of their gravities; especially this author's comedies, that are so framed to the life, that they serve for the most common commentaries of all the actions of our lives, showing such a dexterity and power of wit, that the most displeased with plays are pleased with his comedies. And all such dull and heavy-witted worldlings as were never capable of the wit of a comedy, coming by report of them to his representations, have found that wit there that they never found in themselves, and have parted better-witted than they came; feeling an edge of wit set upon them, more than ever they dreamed they had brain to grind it on. much and such savored salt of wit is in his comedies, that they seem, for their height of pleasure, to be born in that sea that brought forth Venus. Amongst all there is none more witty than this; and had I time I would comment upon it, though I know it needs not, for so much as will make you think your testern well bestowed, but for so much worth as even poor I know to be stuffed in it. It deserves such a labor as well as the best comedy in Terence or xxxti

Plautus. And believe this, that when he is gone, and his comedies out of sale, you will scramble for them, and set up a new English inquisition. Take this for a warning, and at the peril of your pleasure's loss, and judgment's, refuse not, nor like this the less, for not being sullied with the smoky breath of the multitude; but thank fortune for the scape it hath made amongst you; since by the grand possessors' wills I believe you should have prayed for them, rather than been prayed. And so I leave all such to be prayed for (for the states of their wits' healths) that will not praise it. Vale.

<sup>2</sup> There is some obscurity here. The "grand possessors," we have no doubt, were the proprietors of the Globe Theatre, and the passage refers to the means they used to keep Shakespeare's plays out of print. Probably we should understand them as referring not to possessors, but to the comedies for which "a new English inquisition" was to be "set up"; the sense thus being, "you should have prayed to get them, rather than have been prayed to buy them."—H. ### CRESSIDA

The poet has endeavored at first to deceive the reader as well as honest Troilus as to Cressida's character, or to keep him uncertain. She appears at first in company with her uncle, she displays a light but not unequal wit, she is, however, without depth, an adept at double entendre, and indelicate in her expressions. She betrays almost at once that she could say more in praise of Troilus than Pandarus does, that she, however, "holds off," in order to attract them more methodically, because she knows "men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is." In her intercourse with Troilus she maintains her reserve in practice as before in theory, confessing and yielding, and varying the plan of her coquettish allurements, although she is not to appear so much a coquette by profession as by nature, the prey of the first, as afterwards of the second opportunity, when the pander in consequence has so easy a part to play. She was "won at the first glance," she tells Troilus, but confesses that it was "hard to seem won." She had held back, although she wished that "women had men's privilege of speaking first." She acknowledges that she loves him, "but not so much but she might master it!" And yet this is a lie, for her thoughts were like unbridled children, grown Too headstrong for their mother!

Thus she trifles with him, and in every concession she plants a sting; she tempts him by an ambiguous expression to kiss her, and then declares she had not meant it. She plays the same game subsequently with Diomedes, promises, draws back, gives him Troilus' sleeve, takes it away again, and all this to sharpen him like a whetstone; Diomedes, understanding all these arts and jests, declines them, and by this manner also attains his end. With Troilus they are better adapted, although superfluous. She wins him merely by her suspicious anger as to his challenging her truth; the very sign of an evil conscience in her he takes for delicate sensitiveness. She enchants him when she assures him that in simplicity "she'll war with him." She swears also to be unceasingly true to him, but she does so with ominous and equivocal expressions; "Time, force, and death," she says,

Do to this body what extremes you can; But the strong base and building of my love Is as the very center of the earth, Drawing all things to it!

With the same suspicious expression Pandarus praises the innate constancy of all her kindred: "They are burs, they'll stick where they are thrown;" that is, to one as well as to another.—Gervinus, Shakespeare Commentaries.

She is a mere child and beginner in comparison with Cleopatra, for instance, who, for all that, is not so unmercifully condemned. But Shakespeare has aggravated and pointed every circumstance until Cressida becomes odious, and rouses only aversion. The change from love to treachery, from Troilus to Diomedes, is in no earlier poet effected with such rapidity. Whenever Shakespeare expresses by the mouth of one or another of his characters the estimate in which he intends his audience to hold her, one is astounded by the bitterness of the hatred he discloses. It is especially noticeable in the scene (Act IV) in which Cressida comes to the Greek camp and is greeted by the kings with a kiss.

At this point Cressida has as yet offended in nothing. She has, out of pure, vehement love for him, passed such a night with Troilus as Juliet did with Romeo, persuaded to it by Pandarus, as Juliet was by her nurse. Now she accepts and returns the kiss wherewith the Greek chieftains bid her welcome. We may remark, in parenthesis, that at that time there was no impropriety in such a greeting. For all that, Ulysses, who sees through her at the first glance, breaks out on occasion of this kiss which Cressida returns:

"Fie, fie upon her,
There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lips,
Nay, her foot speaks, her wanton spirit looks out
At every joint and motive of her body.
Oh, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give occasion welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish reader! Set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity,
And daughters of the game."

So Shakespeare causes his heroine to be described, and doubtless it is his own last word about her.—Brandes, William Shakespeare.

Shakspere's treatment of the story involves the degradation of Cressida. The charming coquette of Benoît, the voluptuous court-lady of Boccaccio, the tender-hearted widow of Chaucer, becomes in the play a scheming cold-blooded profligate. Such a woman does not need to have Troilus' suit pressed upon her by Pandarus, and if she "holds off" for a time, it is merely, as she frankly confesses, to gratify her vanity and eagerness for despotic sway over her lover:

"Women are angels, wooing:
Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing.
That she beloved knows nought, that knows not this:
Men prize the thing ungained more than it is:
That she was never yet, that ever knew
Love got so sweet as when desire did sue."

This is not the language of passion, whether pure or unholy, but of that calculating wantonness which prefers the feeling of mastery even to sensual gratification. Yet when the confession of her partiality for Troilus cannot be any longer delayed, she cleverly poses as the deeply enamored woman whose lips have hitherto been sealed by modesty. She affects a fear that, in her rapture, she will betray her emotion too unreservedly, and with an ambiguous request to stop her mouth, she draws him into kissing her. Then, with the artfulness of a consummate flirt, she pretends to be eager to hide her confusion in solitude, and can only be prevailed on to stay by a passionate declaration of Troilus' eternal fidelity. She protests her own unswerving loyalty with equal ardor, and crowns this mockery of genuine devotion by yielding to his wishes. When afterwards she hears that she is to be exchanged for Antenor, she declares that she will never leave Troilus, that she has forgotten her father, and that whatever extremes "time, force, and death" may do to her body, "the strong base and building" of her love

> "Is as the very center of the earth Drawing all things to it."

This expression, as Gervinus has noted, is ominous, and on her arrival in the Greek camp she at once shows herself in her true colors. She allows herself to be "kissed in general" by all the chiefs, and she gets the laugh on Menelaus by an equivocal jest. She does not gradually fall away from loyalty to Troilus, for of loyalty her shallow nature is incapable; she simply throws herself with redoubled zest into her old game in this new field. Diomed, who has been her escort between the hostile lines. she spies, as she thinks, a fully qualified substitute for Troilus. But she has mistaken her man, and in the scene between the two in Act V, Shakspere has, with a few pungent strokes, delineated the Nemesis upon the heartless co-Diomed is no raw youth, dwelling in a fool's paradise, and seeing life and love through a rose-colored haze. He is an experienced soldier and man of the world, who takes at a glance the measure of the woman with whor has to deal. He "tames" her by a method as suited to her character and as effective as Petruchio's with Kate. When she tries on him her accustomed trick of holding off. instead of pleading for her favors, he taunts her with being forsworn, and turns his back upon her with a curt It is she then who, to keep him by her side, has to use entreaties and caresses, and even to offer him in pledge of her faith the sleeve given her by Troilus. shallow coquette pays a heavy yet just price for her selfish levity, when she exchanges a chivalrous adorer for a harsh and imperious taskmaster.—Boas, Shakspere and his Predecessors.

TROILUS

Troilus is the youngest of Priam's numerous sons, and the passion of which he is the victim is the bare instinctive impulse of the teens, the form that first love takes when crossed by an unworthy object, which might have been that of Romeo had Rosalind not overstood her opportunity. It is his age that explains how, notwithstanding his high mental endowments, he is so infatuated as to mistake the planned provocation of Cressida's covness for stubborn chastity, and to allow himself to be played with and inflamed by her concerted airs of surprise and confusion when at last they are brought together. He is quite as dull in apprehending the character of Pandarus, and complains of his tetchiness to be wooed to woo, when in fact he is but holding off in the very spirit of his niece and affecting reluctance in order to excite solicitation. Boccaccio furnished some of the lines of this characterization to Chaucer, but Chaucer gave them great development in handing them down to Shakespeare. Troilus is preserved from the ridiculousness that pursues the dupes of coquettes of so debased a stamp as Cressida, by the allowances that untried youth bespeaks, and by the spirit and gallantry that promises the coming self-recovery, the first process of which appears in the control he imposes on his anger and impatience when he looks on at the scene of her falseness, and is completed as we have seen. Still our sympathles are but moderately engaged for him, for what can we say of him but that he is young and a fool—though heroes have been so before and since, fit to be played with and played upon by a jade who only tantalizes him that he may cease to be shy. He is the subjected slave of an intoxication that makes him insensible to the debasement of admitting such a worm as Pandarus into the very presence of what should be the sanctities of love. The ungenuineness of the love that is in question is self-betrayed when in the first declaration, as in the latest parting, he angles for and invites assurances of faithfulness which it is not in the nature of things should be either convincing or true.—Lloyd, Critical Essays.

CRESSIDA AND PANDARUS

The characters of Cressida and Pandarus are very amusing and instructive. The disinterested willingness of Pandarus to serve his friend in an affair which lies next his heart is immediately brought forward. "Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter were a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris, Paris is dirt to him, and I warrant Helen, to change, would give money to boot." This is the language he addresses to his niece: nor is she much behindhand in coming into the plot. Her head is as light and fluttering as her heart. "It is the prettiest villain, she fetches her breath so short as a new-ta'en sparrow." Both characters are originals, and quite different from what they are in Chaucer. In Chaucer, Cressida is represented as a grave, sober, considerate personage (a widow-he cannot tell her age, nor whether she has children or no) who has an alternate eve to her character, her interest, and her pleasure: Shakespear's Cressida is a giddy girl, an unpracticed jilt, who falls in love with Troilus, as she afterwards deserts him, from mere levity and thoughtlessness of temper. She may be wooed and won to anvt1 and from anything, at a moment's warning; the other knows very well what she would be at, and sticks to it, and is more governed by substantial reasons than by caprice or vanity. Pandarus again, in Chaucer's story, is a friendly sort of go-between, tolerably busy, officious, and forward in bringing matters to bear: but in Shakespear he has "a stamp exclusive and professional": he wears the badge of his trade; he is a regular knight of the game.—HAZLITT, Characters of Shakespear's Plays.

THERSITES

The character of Thersites, in particular, well deserves a more careful examination, as the Caliban of demagogic life;—the admirable portrait of intellectual power deserted by all grace, all moral principle, all not momentary impulse;—just wise enough to detect the weak head, and fool enough to provoke the armed fist of his betters;—one whom malcontent Achilles can inveigle from malcontent Ajax, under the one condition, that he shall be called on to do nothing but abuse and slander, and that he shall be allowed to abuse as much and as purulently as he likes. that is, as he can;—in short, a mule,—quarrelsome by the original discord of his nature,—a slave by tenure of his own baseness,—made to bray and be brayed at, to despise and be despicable. "Ave, Sir, but say what you will, he is a very clever fellow, though the best friends will fall There was a time when Ajax thought he deserved to have a statue of gold erected to him, and handsome Achilles, at the head of the Myrmidons, gave no little credit to his friend Thersites!"—Coleringe, Lectures on Shakspere.

THE CAUSE OF THE GREEKS

Viewed in a moral and just sense, the cause of the Greeks is not better than that of the Trojans; on the side of honor it is worse. Shakespeare has allowed the Homeric

Achilles, who purchased lasting fame with a short life, to degenerate from a hero into a vain, morbidly proud, and effeminate mocker. Not on account of any dispute with Agamemnon, but for the sake of the promised Polyxena, he withdraws from the fight and from glory; he has no sympathy with the common honor, like Hector; he abandons the glory and honor of Greece to follow this love; he cares for nothing in the world but what affects him personally; he rouses himself, therefore, first after the death of Patroclus (this trait also Shakespeare takes from Homer), and even then only for a victory which brings him more ignominy than honor. The weak Ajax imitates him in haughtiness and inactivity, and withdraws, as Achilles had done, in the decisive moment, after having won a little honor. Ulysses takes all possible pains to arouse in both the public spirit, the ambition, and the thirst for glory which overflowed in Hector and Troilus. finest speeches in the play, as well as the intrigues which lengthen out the action, have reference to this intention. To this we may trace that eloquent speech on the destroyed discipline and deference to rank (Act I, sc. iii), and on the fever of envy which caused those divisions and weakness in the camp, wherein lay the strength of Troy. There is reference to it in the proposal to appoint Ajax for the single combat with Hector, and thereby to rouse Achilles. There is reference to it in the oft-recurring eulogy of the ascendency of mental over bodily strength. There is reference to it in the shameless flattery with which they bait the stupid Ajax, and feed his hungry, envious ambition. There is reference to it in the noble lesson (Act III, sc. iii) impressed upon Achilles, and which was the purport of Ulysses' first speech, that steadfastness alone keeps honor bright. All this has little effect; the two strong-armed heroes have too little feeling for honor and glory, Hector and Troilus have too much; these latter mean well and do ill, the former mean ill and do well, or rather they escape harm. On the side of the Greeks, Nestor and Ulysses fare the best, because they possess at least public spirit policy. Yet this also is only ordinary cunning which displays profound wisdom in the mysteries of state policy when the question concerns mere espionage, a wisdom which in consequence attains its ends only in an equivocal manner.—Gervinus, Shakespeare Commentaries.

SHAKESPEARE'S INTENTION

Shakspeare's intention was rather to use the satirical element only for the representation of a higher, we might almost say, an historical view of life. As several of his comedies possess not only a general, but also an historical significance, in so far as they describe—within the comic view of life—the most important moral and political foundations of the life of his age, so the historical significance appears here to be made the real nucleus of the composition, and runs through it like a bright streak of light giving a peculiar illustration of that part of history upon which it touches. For, as I think, Shakspeare intended to point out the profound all-pervading contrast between the much-commended mental character and life of Greek antiquity, as compared with the new principle of life in the Christian era, and to reveal the blemishes and defects of Greek life, especially in regard to its morals, as compared with the ever-increasing admiration bestowed upon it. This could probably not be effected otherwise than by giving a closer view of the essential foundation of the ancient, and more especially of Greek, life and mental culture, taken from a comico-poetic standpoint. And this foundation, as is acknowledged on all hands, is formed by the Homeric poems, or, what is the same thing, the Trojan war in its mythico-poetic conception. But these immortal poems, when regarded from a strictly moral point of view, and in spite of all their ideality, obviously contain a decidedly immoral element, or, if it be preferred, the form in which the idea is clothed—according to our higher modern conception of moral relations—presents an ugly blot. For the whole of the external story turns upon the recovery of an adulteress who has run off with her lover, and whose sentiments and manner of acting can in no way be excused, either by ideal beauty or by the interference of the gods (Aphrodite); on the contrary, the immorality in which even the gods themselves take part, appears only the more glaring by such an interference. Helen's abduction was not worthy of the great war of vengeance which was undertaken by the Greek princes; for the honor of the Greek nation was more deeply wronged by Helen herself than by A war undertaken for such a cause and such an object must, therefore, be repulsive to the moral consciousness of modern times; and still more do we feel this subsequently when Helen and her wronged husband are again united, and restored to all their rights, as if nothing had happened. It is true that the Greeks had a different idea of marriage and of the mission of women; this we all know, and Shakspeare doubtless knew it also. But the very fact of their entertaining such notions, is the immoral part of This is the dark side of Greek antiquity: a the matter. youthfully vigorous, but also youthfully sensuous view of life supported by the idea of beauty, and idealized as regards form; a view of life which raised beauty into an absolute privilege, and considered its value as greater than that of goodness and truth. It was only individual philosophical minds that rose above this idea, without, however, being able to gain a different standpoint or to raise the minds of the people to a level with their own.—Ulrici, Shakspeare's Dramatic Art.

THE TENDENCY OF THE PLAY

The feeling which the study of Shakspere's Troilus and Cressida slowly but certainly calls forth, is that of almost prostration before the marvelous intellect which has produced it. But this is the result of study, as we have said. The play cannot be understood upon a superficial reading: it is full of the most subtle art. We may set aside particular passages, and admire their surpassing

THE PROLOGUE

In Troy there lies the scene. From isles of

The princes orgulous, their high blood chafed, Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Fraught with the ministers and instruments Of cruel war: sixty and nine, that wore Their crownets regal, from the Athenian bay Put forth toward Phrygia, and their vow is made

To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,

With wanton Paris sleeps; and that's the quarrel.

To Tenedos they come;

And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge Their warlike fraughtage: now on Dardan plains

The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch Their brave pavilions: Priam's six-gated city, Dardan, and Timbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien, <sup>15. &</sup>quot;six-gated city"; Theobald, "six gates i' th' city."—I. G. 16. "Timbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien," so Ff.; Theobald reads "Thymbria, Ilia, Scæa, Troian"; Capell, "Thymbria, Ilias, Chetas, Troyan."—I, G.

And Antenorides, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
Sets all on hazard: and hither am I come
A prologue arm'd, but not in confidence
Of author's pen or actor's voice, but suited
In like conditions as our argument,
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings of those broils,

Beginning in the middle; starting thence away To what may be digested in a play.

Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are: 30 Now good or bad, 'tis but the chance of war.

ACT FIRST

Scene I

Troy. Before Priam's palace. Enter Pandarus and Troilus.

Tro. Call here my varlet; I'll unarm again:
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within?
Each Trojan that is master of his heart,
Let him to field; Troilus, alas, hath none!
Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended?
Tro. The Greeks are strong and skillful to their strength,

Fierce to their skill and to their fierceness valiant.

But I am weaker than a woman's tear, Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance, Less valiant than the virgin in the night, And skilless as unpracticed infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this: for my part, I'll not meddle nor make no farther. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must needs tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Pan. Aye, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Tro. Have I not tarried?

Act I. Sc. i.

Pan. Aye, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Aye, to the leavening; but here's yet in the word 'hereafter,' the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be, Doth lesser blench at sufferance than I do.

At Priam's royal table do I sit;

And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—

So, traitor!—'When she comes!'—When is she thence?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee:—when my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain,
Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,
I have, as when the sun doth light a storm,
Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile:
But sorrow, that is crouch'd in seeming gladness.

Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,— When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd, Reply not in how many fathoms deep 51 They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad In Cressid's love: thou answer'st 'she is fair:' Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. Faith. I'll not meddle in 't. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her: an she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.

70

Tro. Good Pandarus, how now, Pandarus!

Pan. I have had my labor for my travail; illthought on of her, and ill-thought on of you: gone between and between, but small thanks for my labor.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with me?

Pan. Because she's kin to me, therefore she's not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen 80 is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not an she were a black-a-moor: 'tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She's a fool to stay behind her father; let her to the Greeks; and so I'll tell her the next time I see her: for my part, I'll meddle nor make no more i' the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me: I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit. An alarum.

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamors! peace, rude sounds!

Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair, When with your blood you daily paint her thus. I cannot fight upon this argument;

It is too starved a subject for my sword.

But Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague me! 100

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar; And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit. Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love, What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we. Her bed is India; there she lies, a pearl: Between our Ilium and where she resides, Let it be call'd the wild and wandering flood, Tro. Because not there: this woman's answer sorts, For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Æneas, from the field to-day?

Ene. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Tro. By whom, Æneas?

SCENE II

The same. A street.

Enter Cressida and Alexander her man.

Cres. Who were those went by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba and Helen.

Cres. And whither go they?

1'ex. Up to the eastern tower,

Whose height commands as subject all the vale, To see the battle. Hector, whose patience Is as a virtue fix'd, to-day was moved: He chid Andromache and struck his armorer; And, like as there were husbandry in war, Before the sun rose he was harness'd light, And to the field goes he; where every flower Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw 10 In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his cause of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, this: there is among the Greeks

A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector; They call him Ajax.

Cres. Good; and what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se,

And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men, unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions; he is as valiant as the lion, churlish as the bear, slow as the elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humors that his valor is crushed into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of, nor any man an attaint but he carries some stain of it: he is melancholy without cause and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every thing; but every thing so out of joint that he is a 30

Act I. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

gouty Briareus, many hands and no use, or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say he yesterday coped Hector in the battle and struck him down, the disdain and shame whereof hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter Pandarus.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressid: what do you talk of? Good morrow, Alexander. How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came?
Was Hector armed and gone ere you came to Ilium? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. E'en so: Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too;

40

he 'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them 60 that: and there 's Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cres. O Jupiter! there 's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector?

Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Aye, if I ever saw him before and knew 70 him.

Pan. Well, I say Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself! Alas, poor Troilus! I would he were.

Cres. So he is.

Pan. Condition, I had gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself! no, he's not himself: would a' were himself! Well, the gods are above; time must friend or end: well, Troilus, well, I would my heart were in her body! No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

80

Pan. Th' other 's not come to 't; you shall tell me another tale, when th' other 's come to 't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities.

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'Twould not become him; his own 's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece: Helen herself swore th' other day, that Troilus, for a 100 brown favor—for so 'tis, I must confess,—not brown neither.—

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She praised his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath color enough.

Pan So he has.

Cres. Then Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is 110 higher than his; he having color enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him th' other day into the compassed win-120 dow,—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin,—

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young: and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man and so old a lifter? Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him: she came and puts me her white hand 130 to his cloven chin.—

Cres. Juno have mercy! how came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled: I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to, then: but to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus.—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus! why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin; indeed, she has a marvelous white hand, I must needs confess,—150

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Act I. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Pan. But there was such laughing! Queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.

Cres. With mill-stones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run o'er too? 160 Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, 'Here's but two and fifty hairs 170 on your chin, and one of them is white.'

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that. 'Two and fifty hairs,' quoth he, 'and one white: that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons.' 'Jupiter!' quoth she, 'which of these hairs is Paris my husband?' 'The forked one,' quoth he, 'pluck't out, and give it him.' But there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, 180 and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.

<sup>170. &</sup>quot;two and fifty"; so Q., Ff.; Theobald reads "one and fifty": "hairs"; Q. reads "heires."—I. G.

<sup>181. &</sup>quot;so laughed, that it passed"; laughed surpassingly, immodialy.—C. H. H.

Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yester-day; think on't.

Cres. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn 'tis true; he will weep you, an 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettle against May. [A retreat sounded. 190]

Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field: shall we stand up here, and see them as they pass toward Ilium? good niece, do, sweet niece Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here 's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I 'll tell you them all by their names as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

Æneas passes.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

200

Pan. That's Æneas: is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: but mark Troilus; you shall see anon. Cres. Who's that?

Antenor passes.

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I

205. "he has a shrewd wit"; in the Troy Book of Lydgate, Antenor is thus described:

"Copious in words, and one that much time spent
To jest, when as he was in companie,
So driely, that no man could it espie;
And therewith held his countenance so well,
That every man received great content
To heare him speake, and pretty jests to tell, can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person. When comes Troilus? I'll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him nod 210 at me.

Cres. Will he give you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

Hector passes.

Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you that; there's a fellow! Go thy way, Hector! There's a brave man, niece. O brave Hector! Look how he looks! there's a countenance! is't not a brave man?

Cres. O, a brave man!

220

Pan. Is a' not? it does a man's heart good. Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there: there's no jesting; there's laying on, take't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!

Cres. Be those with swords?

Pan. Swords! any thing, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: by God's lid, it does one's heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris.

230

Paris passes.

Look ye yonder, niece; is 't not a gallant man

When he was pleasant and in merriment:

For tho' that he most commonly was sad,

Yet in his speech some jest he always had."—H. N. H.

too, is't not? Why, this is brave now. Who said he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, this will do Helen's heart good now, ha! Would I could see Troilus now! you shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

Helenus passes.

Pan. That's Helenus: I marvel where Troilus is. That's Helenus. I think he went not forth to-day. That's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus! no; yes, he 'll fight indifferent well. I marvel where Troilus is. Hark! do you not hear the people cry 'Troilus'? Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Troilus passes.

Pan. Where? yonder? that 's Deiphobus. 'Tis Troilus! there 's a man, niece! Hem! Brave Troilus! the prince of chivalry!

Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!

Pan. Mark him; note him. O brave Troilus!
Look well upon him, niece; look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hacked than Hector's; and how he looks, and how he goes! O admirable youth! he never saw three-and-twenty. Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way! Had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris? Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to <sup>260</sup> change, would give an eye to boot.

Common Soldiers pass.

Cres. Here come more.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, chaff and bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die i' the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles are gone: crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles, a 270 better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles! a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well! Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

:d

Cres. Aye, a minced man: and then to be baked with no date in the pie, for then the man's date is out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what ward you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my mask, to defend my beauty; and you, to defend all these: and at all these wards I lie, at a thou-290 sand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow; unless it swell past hiding, and then it's past watching.

Pan. You are such another.

Enter Troilus's Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with 300 you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit Boy. I doubt he be hurt. Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I will be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle?

Pan. Aye, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token, you are a bawd.

That she beloved knows nought that knows not this:

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is:
That she was never yet that ever knew

Love got so sweet as when desire did sue:
Therefore this maxim out of love I teach:
Achievement is command; ungain'd, beseech.
Then though my heart's content firm love doth bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exeunt.

SCENE III

The Grecian camp. Before Agamemnon's tent.

Sennet. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses,

Menelaus, with others.

Agam. Princes,

What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks?

The ample proposition that hope makes

316. "wooing"; i. e. while still unwon.—C. H. H.

317. "joy's soul lies in the doing," so Q., F. 1; Ff. 2, 3, 4 read "the soules joy lyes in dooing." Mason conj. "dies"; Seymour conj. "lives," &c.—I. G.

323. "Achievement is command," etc.; when we are won we receive command, while unwon, entreaties.—C. H. H.

In all designs begun on earth below

Fails in the promised largeness: checks and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd,
As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.
Nor, princes, is it matter new to us

10
That we come short of our suppose so far
That after seven years' siege yet Troy walls stand;

Sith every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim
And that unbodied figure of the thought
That gave 't surmised shape. Why then, you princes,

Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works, And call them shames? which are indeed nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove
To find persistive constancy in men:
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love; for then the bold and coward,
The wise and fool, the artist and unread,
The hard and soft, seem all affined and kin:
But in the wind and tempest of her frown,
Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away,
And what hath mass or matter, by itself
Lies rich in virtue and unmingled.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply
Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men: the sea being smooth.

Act I. Sc. iii.

How many shallow bauble boats dare sail
Upon her patient breast, making their way
With those of nobler bulk!
But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage
The gentle Thetis, and anon behold
The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut.

Bounding between the two moist elements, Like Perseus' horse: where 's then the saucy boat,

Whose weak untimber'd sides but even now Co-rival'd greatness? either to harbor fled, Or made a toast for Neptune, Even so Doth valor's show and valor's worth divide In storms of fortune: for in her ray and brightness

The herd hath more annoyance by the breese
Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind
Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks,
And flies fled under shade, why then the thing
of courage

As roused with rage with rage doth sympathize, And with an accent tuned in selfsame key

S1. "thy godlike"; Theobald's emendation; Q., "the godlike"; Ff., "thy godly"; Pope, "thy goodly."—I. G.
52. "with rage does sympathize"; it is said of the tiger that in <sup>52. &</sup>quot;with rage does sympathize"; it is said of the tiger that in stormy and high winds he rages and roars most furiously.—H. N. H.

Retorts to chiding fortune.

Ulyss. Agamemnon,

Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece,

Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit, In whom the tempers and the minds of all Should be shut up, hear what Ulysses speaks.

Besides the applause and approbation

The which, [To Agamemnon] most mighty for thy place and sway,

[To Nestor] And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,

I give to both your speeches, which were such

As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece

Should hold up high in brass, and such again

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver.

Should with a bond of air, strong as the axletree

On which heaven rides, knit all the Greekish ears

To his experienced tongue, yet let it please both, Thou great, and wise, to hear Ulysses speak.

Agam. Speak, Prince of Ithaca; and be't of less expect 70

That matter needless, of importless burthen, Divide thy lips, than we are confident, When rank Thersites opes his mastic jaws, We shall hear music, wit and oracle.

<sup>54. &</sup>quot;Retorts"; Dyce's emendation; Q., Ff. read "Retires."—I. G. 70-75. Omitted in Q.—I. G.

Act I. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down, And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master.

But for these instances.

The specialty of rule hath been neglected:

And, look, how many Grecian tents do stand

Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.

When that the general is not like the hive

To whom the foragers shall all repair,

What honey is expected? Degree being vizarded,

The unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.

The heavens themselves, the planets and this center,

Observe degree, priority and place,

Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,

Office and custom, in all line of order:

And therefore is the glorious planet Sol

In noble eminence enthroned and sphered

Amidst the other; whose medicinable eye

Amost the other; whose medicinable ey

Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,

And posts like the commandment of a king,

Sans check to good and bad: but when the planets

In evil mixture to disorder wander,

What plagues and what portents, what mutiny,

What raging of the sea, shaking of earth,

Commotion in the winds, frights, changes, horrors.

<sup>77. &</sup>quot;these instances"; the following reasons.—C. H. H. 92. "ill aspects of planets evil"; so Ff.; Q., "influence of euill Planets."—I. G.

Divert and crack, rend and deracinate

The unity and married calm of states

Quite from their fixture! O, when degree is shaked,

Which is the ladder to all high designs, The enterprise is sick! How could communities,

Degrees in schools and brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from dividable shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, scepters, laurels,
But by degree, stand in authentic place?
Take but degree away, untune that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing
meets

In mere oppugnancy: the bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe:
Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike his father dead:
Force should be right; or rather, right and wrong,

Between whose endless jar justice resides, Should lose their names, and so should justice too.

Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite; 120
And appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
This chaos, when degree is suffocate,

Act I. Sc. iii TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Follows the choking.

And this neglection of degree it is
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb. The general 's disdain'd
By him one step below; he by the next; 130
That next by him beneath: so every step,
Exampled by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emulation:
And 'tis this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakness stands, not in her
strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd

The fever whereof all our power is sick.

Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,

What is the remedy?

Ulyss. The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehand of our host,
Having his ear full of his airy fame,
Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
Lies mocking our designs: with him, Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed, the livelong day
Breaks scurril jests;
And with ridiculous and awkward action,
Which, slanderer, he imitation calls,

129. "it hath to climb"; of course, where each man strives to overtop or kick back his superiors, others will be moved to do the same by him, so that his way of climbing will result in a progress downwards; as men, by despising the law of their fathers, teach their children to despise them.—H. N. H.

He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon,

Thy topless deputation he puts on;
And, like a strutting player, whose conceit
Lies in the hamstring, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,

Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks, 'Tis like a chime a-mending; with terms unsquared,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd, 160

Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty, stuff,

The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling, From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause; Cries 'Excellent! 'tis Agamemnon just.

Now play me Nestor; hem, and stroke thy beard,

As he being dress'd to some oration.'
That 's done; as near as the extremest ends

Of parallels, as like as Vulcan and his wife:

Yet god Achilles still cries 'Excellent!

'Tis Nestor right. Now play him me, Patroclus, 170

Arming to answer in a night alarm.'
And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth; to cough and spit,

153. "conceit"; imagination.—C. H. H.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

And, with a palsy fumbling on his gorget, Shake in and out the rivet: and at this sport Sir Valor dies; cries 'O, enough, Patroclus; Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all In pleasure of my spleen.' And in this fashion, All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes, Severals and generals of grace exact, 180 Achievements, plots, orders, preventions, Excitements to the field or speech for truce, Success or loss, what is or is not, serves As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Act I. Sc. iii.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain,
Who, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice, many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-will'd, and bears his head
In such a rein, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him; 190
Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war
Bold as an oracle, and sets Thersites,
A slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint,
To match us in comparisons with dirt,
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy and call it cowardice, Count wisdom as no member of the war, Forestall prescience, and esteem no act But that of hand: the still and mental parts 200 That do contrive how many hands shall strike When fitness calls them on, and know by measure

195. "weaken and discredit our exposure"; weaken, by discrediting us, our ability to resist the assaults to which we are exposed.—C. H. H.

Of their observant toil the enemies' weight,— Why, this hath not a finger's dignity; They call this bed-work, mappery, closet-war: So that the ram that batters down the wall, For the great swing and rudeness of his poise, They place before his hand that made the engine,

Or those that with the fineness of their souls By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse
Makes many Thetis' sons. [Tucket.
Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.
Men. From Troy.

Enter Æneas.

Agam. What would you 'fore our tent? Æne. Is this great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you? Agam. Even this.

Enc. May one that is a herald and a prince Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm 220

'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice

Call Agamemnon head and general.

Ann. Fair leave and large security. How may A stranger to those most imperial looks

Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. How!

Æne. Aye:

I ask, that I might waken reverence,

220. "Achilles'"; Johnson conj. "Alciaes'."—I. G. XXII—3

Act I. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

And bid the cheek be ready with a blush Modest as morning when she coldly eyes

The youthful Phœbus:

230
Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of Troy Are ceremonious courtiers.

Enc. Courtiers as free, as debonair, unarm'd, As bending angels; that's their fame in peace: But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,

Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Jove's accord,

Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Æneas, Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lips! 240 The worthiness of praise distains his worth,

If that the praised himself bring the praise forth:

But what the repining enemy commends, That breath fame blows; that praise, sole pure, transcends.

'Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Æneas? Æne. Aye, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What's your affair, I pray you?

Æne. Sir, pardon; 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Agam. He hears nought privately that comes from Troy.

**Ene. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him: 250

238. "And, Jove's accord," i. e. "And, Jove granting or favoring"; various emendations have been proposed on the supposition that the re is corrupt.—I. G.

'repining"; i. e. mortified by defeat.-C. H. H.

I bring a trumpet to awake his ear, To set his sense on the attentive bent, And then to speak.

Agam. Speak frankly as the wind; It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour: That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake, He tells thee so himself.

Ene. Trumpet, blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents:

And every Greek of mettle, let him know, What Troy means fairly shall be spoke aloud. [Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy <sup>260</sup> A prince call'd Hector—Priam is his father—Who in this dull and long-continued truce Is rusty grown: he bade me take a trumpet, And to this purpose speak. Kings, princes, lords!

If there be one among the fair'st of Greece That holds his honor higher than his ease, That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril,

That knows his valor and knows not his fear, That loves his mistress more than in confession

269. "confession" is used for profession; a profession of love falsely or idly made to the object.—Steevens, with his usual sagacity and pertinence, remarks upon the Poet's anachronism in putting this challenge in a style more suitable to Palmerin or Amadis, than to Hector or Æneas. Just as if the whole play were not a binding up of the characters and incidents of classic times with the manners and sentiments of Gothic chivalry. Shakespeare learned this from the romance-writers, and from none more than from Chaucer, who, nevertheless, seems to have known that Greece

Act I. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

With truant vows to her own lips he loves, 270 And dare avow her beauty and her worth In other arms than hers—to him this challenge. Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks, Shall make it good, or do his best to do it, He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer, Than ever Greek did compass in his arms; And will to-morrow with his trumpet call Midway between your tents and walls of Troy, To rouse a Grecian that is true in love: If any come, Hector shall honor him; 280 If none, he'll say in Troy when he retires, The Grecian dames are sunburnt and not worth The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

was neither a Gothic nor a Christian nation.—The incident of the challenge was most likely taken from Chapman's Homer, where it is represented thus:

"Hear, Trojans, and ye well-arm'd Greeks, what my strong mind, diffus'd

Through all my spirits, commands me speak: Saturnius hath not us'd

His promis'd favour for our truce; but, studying both our ills, Will never cease till Mars, by you, his ravenous stomach fills With ruin'd Troy; or we consume your mighty sea-born fleet. Since, then, the general peers of Greece in reach of one voice meet, Amongst you all whose breast includes the most impulsive mind, Let him stand forth as combatant, by all the rest design'd; Before whom thus I call high Jove to witness of our strife: If he with home-thrust iron can reach th' exposure of my life, Spoiling my arms, let him at will convey them to his tent; But let my body be return'd, that Troy's two-sex'd descent May waste it in the funeral pile: if I can slaughter him, Apollo honouring me so much, I'll spoil his conquer'd limb, And bear his arms to Ilion, where in Apollo's shrine I'll hang them as my trophies due; his body I'll resign, To be disposed by his friends in flamy funerals, And honour'd with erected tomb where Hellespontus falls Into Egæum, and doth reach even to your naval road."—H. N. H.

Agam. This shall be told our lovers, Lord Æneas; If none of them have soul in such a kind, We left them all at home: but we are soldiers; And may that soldier a mere recreant prove, That means not, hath not, or is not in love! If then one is, or hath, or means to be, That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man When Hector's grandsire suck'd: he is old now; But if there be not in our Grecian host One noble man that hath one spark of fire, To answer for his love, tell him from me I'll hide my silver beard in a gold beaver, And in my vantbrace put this wither'd brawn, And meeting him will tell him that my lady Was fairer than his grandam, and as chaste As may be in the world: his youth in flood, 300 I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Ene. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth! Ulyss. Amen.

Agam. Fair Lord Æneas, let me touch your hand; To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir. Achilles shall have word of this intent; So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent: Yourself shall feast with us before you go.

And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but Ulysses and Nestor. Ulyss. Nestor! 310

Nest. What says Ulysses?

Ulyss. I have a young conception in my brain,

Act I. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is 't?

Ulyss. This 'tis:

Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded pride
That hath to this maturity blown up
In rank Achilles must or now be cropp'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbulk us all.

Nest. Well, and how? 320
Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends.

However it is spread in general name, Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,

Whose grossness little characters sum up:
And, in the publication, make no strain,
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Libya,—though, Apollo knows,
'Tis dry enough—will, with great speed of judgment,

Aye, with celerity, find Hector's purpose 330 Pointing on him.

Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you?

Nest. Yes, 'tis most meet: who may you else oppose,

That can from Hector bring his honor off,

313. "Be you my time"; i. e. play the part of time in bringing it to mature form.—C. H. H.

315, 354-356. Omitted in Q.—I. G.

326. "in the publication"; when the challenge is publicly proclaimed.—C. H. H.

If not Achilles? Though't be a sportful combat,

Yet in this trial much opinion dwells; For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute With their finest palate: and trust to me, Ulysses,

Our imputation shall be oddly poised 340 In this wild action; for the success, Although particular, shall give a scantling Of good or bad unto the general; And in such indexes, although small pricks To their subsequent volumes, there is seen The baby figure of the giant mass Of things to come at large. It is supposed He that meets Hector issues from our choice: And choice, being mutual act of all our souls, Makes merit her election, and doth boil. As 'twere from forth us all, a man distill'd 350 Out of our virtues; who miscarrying, What heart from hence receives the conquering part,

To steel a strong opinion to themselves? Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments, In no less working than are swords and bows Directive by the limbs.

<sup>339. &</sup>quot;our imputation"; our reputation will weigh unevenly in the fight, i. s. will not be unaffected by the triumph or failure of our champion.—C. H. H.

Act I. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech;

Therefore 'tis meet Achilles meet not Hector.

Let us, like merchants, show our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they 'll sell; if not, 360

The luster of the better yet to show,
Shall show the better. Do not consent
That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
For both our honor and our shame in this
Are dogg'd with two strange followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eyes: what are they?

Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,

Were he not proud, we all should share with him:

But he already is too insolent; And we were better parch in Afric sun 370 Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes, Should he 'scape Hector fair: if he were foil'd Why then, we did our main opinion crush In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery: And by device let blockish Ajax draw The sort to fight with Hector: among ourselves Give him allowance for the better man; For that will physic the great Myrmidon Who broils in loud applause, and make him fall His crest that prouder than blue Iris bends. 380 If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off, We'll dress him up in voices: if he fail, Yet go we under our opinion still That we have better men. But, hit or miss. Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,

Ajax employ'd plucks down Achilles' plumes. Nest. Ulysses,

Now I begin to relish thy advice;
And I will give a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon: go we to him straight. 390
Two curs shall tame each other: pride alone
Must tarre the mastiffs on, as 'twere their bone.

[Execunt.

ACT SECOND

The Grecian camp.

Enter A jax and Thersites.

Ajax. Thersites!

Ther. Agamemnon—how if he had boils—full, all over, generally?

Ajax. Thersites!

Ther. And those boils did run?—Say so,—did not the general run then? were not that a botchy core?

Ajax. Dog!

Ther. Then would come some matter from him; I see none now.

Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear? Feel, then. [Strikes him.

Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!

Ajax. Speak then, thou vinewed'st leaven, speak: I will beat thee into handsomeness.

Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: but, I think, thy horse will sooner con an oration than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red 20 murrain o' thy jade's tricks!

Ajax. Toadstool, learn me the proclamation.

Ther. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strikest me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation!

Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.

Ajax. Do not, porpentine, do not; my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee; I <sup>30</sup> would make thee the loathsomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strikest as slow as another.

Ajax. I say, the proclamation!

Ther. Thou grumblest and railest every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, aye, that thou barkest at him.

Ajax. Mistress Thersites!

Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.

Ajax. Cobloaf!

Ther. He would pun thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.

Ajax. [Beating him] You whoreson cur!

Ther. Do, do.

Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!

Ther. Aye, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assinego may tutor thee: thou scurvy-valiant ass! thou art here but to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a barba-

32-33. Omitted in Ff.-I. G.

Act II. Sc. i. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Achil. What 's the quarrel?

100

Ajax. I bade the vile owl go learn me the tenor of the proclamation, and he rails upon me.

Ther. I serve thee not.

Ajax. Well, go to, go to.

Ther. I serve here voluntary.

Achil. Your last service was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary: Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress.

Ther. E'en so; a great deal of your wit too lies 110 in your sinews, or else there be liars. Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: a' were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?

Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor, whose wit was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on their toes, yoke you like draught-oxen, and make you plow up the wars.

Achil. What? what?

Ther. Yes, good sooth: to, Achilles! to, Ajax! to!

Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter; I shall speak as much as thou afterwards.

Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace!

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles' brooch bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hanged, like clotpoles, ere I 130

128. "brooch"; Rowe, "brach"; Malone conj. "brock."-I. G.

come any more to your tents: I will keep where there is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools.

[Exit.

Patr. A good riddance.

Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaim'd through all our host:

That Hector, by the fifth hour of the sun,
Will with a trumpet 'twixt our tents and Troy
To-morrow morning call some knight to arms
That hath a stomach, and such a one that dare
Maintain—I know not what: 'tis trash. Farewell.

Ajax. Farewell. Who shall answer him?
Achil. I know not; 'tis put to lottery; otherwise

He knew his man.

Ajax. O, meaning you. I will go learn more of it. [Exeunt.

Scene II

Troy. A room in Priam's palace.

Enter Priam, Hector, Troilus, Paris, and Helenus.

Pri. After so many hours, lives, speeches spent,
Thus once again says Nestor from the Greeks:

136. "the fifth hour"; the quarto has "the first hour of the sun." In Act III, sc. iii, Thersites speaks of "eleven o'clock" as the hour for the duel; which shows that fifth is right. The thing were of no consequence, but for what is well stated by Knight, thus: "The knights of chivalry did not encounter at the first hour of the sun; by the fifth, on a summer's morning, the lists would be set, and the ladies in their seats. The usages of chivalry are those of this play."—H. N. H.

Act II. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

'Deliver Helen, and all damage else,

As honor, loss of time, travail, expense,

Wounds, friends, and what else dear that is consumed

In hot digestion of this cormorant war,

Shall be struck off.' Hector, what say you to 't?

Hect. Though no man lesser fears the Greeks than I

As far as toucheth my particular,

Yet, dread Priam,

10

There is no lady of more softer bowels.

More spongy to suck in the sense of fear,

More ready to cry out 'Who knows what follows?'

Than Hector is: the wound of peace is surety, Surety secure: but modest doubt is call'd

The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand dismes.

Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours: 20 If we have lost so many tenths of ours, To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us, Had it our name, the value of one ten, What merit's in that reason which denies The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie, my brother! Weigh you the worth and honor of a king, your reasons: You know an enemy intends you harm;

You know a sword employ'd is perilous,

And reason flies the object of all harm:

Who marvels then, when Helenus beholds

A Grecian and his sword, if he do set

The very wings of reason to his heels,

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,

Or like a star disorb'd? Nay, if we talk of reason.

40

Let's shut our gates, and sleep: manhood and honor

Should have hare hearts, would they but fat their thoughts

With this cramm'd reason: reason and respect Make livers pale and lustihood deject. 50 XXII—4

Act II. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Hect. Brother she is not worth what she doth cost The holding.

Tro. What 's aught, but as 'tis valued?

Hect. But value dwells not in particular will;
It holds his estimate and dignity
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself
As in the prizer:'tis mad idolatry
To make the service greater than the god;

And the will dotes, that is attributive To what infectiously itself affects,

Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment: how may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
To blench from this, and to stand firm by honor.
We turn not back the silks upon the merchant
When we have soil'd them, nor the remainder viands

We do not throw in unrespective sieve,
Because we now are full. It was thought meet
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:
Your breath of full consent bellied his sails;
The seas and winds, old wranglers, took a truce,
And did him service: he touch'd the ports desired:

And for an old aunt whom the Greeks held captive

77. "an old aunt whom the Greeks held captive," i. e. "Priam's

He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness

Wrinkles Apollo's and makes stale the morning. Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt: Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl, 81 Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,

And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.

If you'll avouch 'twas wisdom Paris went,
As you must needs, for you all cried 'Go, go,'

If you'll confess he brought home noble prize,
As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands.

And cried 'Inestimable!' why do you now The issue of your proper wisdoms rate, And do a deed that Fortune never did, 90 Beggar the estimation which you prized Richer than sea and land? O, theft most base, That we have stol'n what we do fear to keep! But thieves unworthy of a thing so stol'n, That in their country did them that disgrace, We fear to warrant in our native place!

Cas. [Within] Cry, Trojans, cry!

Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?

Tro. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voice.

Cas. [Within] Cry, Trojans!

Hect. It is Cassandra.

sister, Hesione, whom Hercules, being enraged at Priam's breach of faith, gave to Telamon, who by her had Ajax" (Malone).—I. G. 82. "whose price hath launched"; a reminiscence of the famous line in Marlowe's Faustus, "Is this the face that launched a thousand ships."—C. H. H.

Act II. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Enter Cassandra, raving, with her hair about her ears.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes, And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hect. Peace, sister, peace!

Cas. Virgins and boys, mid age and wrinkled eld,
Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
Add to my clamors! let us pay betimes
A moiety of that mass of moan to come.
Cry, Trojans, cry! practice your eyes with tears!
Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilion stand;
Our firebrand brother, Paris, burns us all. 110
Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen and a woe:
Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go.

[Exit.

Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains

Of divination in our sister work Some touches of remorse? or is your blood So madly hot that no discourse of reason, Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause, Can qualify the same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it; 120
Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures

110. "Our frebrand brother, Paris," alluding to Hecuba's dream that she should be delivered of a burning torch.—I. G.

116. "discourse of reason"; exercise of reason (in argument).— C. H. H.

Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel
Which hath our several honors all engaged
To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid there should be done amongst us

Such things as might offend the weakest spleen To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity
As well my undertakings as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project.
For what, alas, can these my single arms?
What propugnation is in one man's valor,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wiped off in honorable keeping her.
What treason were it to the ransack'd queen, 150

150. "treason"; treachery.-C. H. H.

'Act II. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me, Now to deliver her possession up On terms of base compulsion! Can it be That so degenerate a strain as this Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?

There's not the meanest spirit on our party, Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw, When Helen is defended, nor none so noble, Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unfamed, Where Helen is the subject: then, I say, 160 Well may we fight for her, whom, we know well,

The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hect. Paris and Troilus, you have both said well;
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glozed, but superficially; not much
Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Unfit to hear moral philosophy.
The reasons you allege do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure and revenge

Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice Of any true decision. Nature craves

166. "Aristotle thought"; Rowe and Pope proposed "graver sages think," to save Shakespeare from the terrible anachronism. It has been pointed out that Aristotle speaks of political and not of moral philosophy; and, further, that Bacon makes the same mistake in his Advancement of Learning, Book ii. (published 1605).—I. G.

172. "more deaf than adders"; the deafness of the adder was proverbial in popular natural history.—C. H. H.

All dues be render'd to their owners: now, What nearer debt in all humanity Than wife is to the husband? If this law Of nature be corrupted through affection, And that great minds, of partial indulgence To their benumbed wills, resist the same, There is a law in each well-order'd nation 180 To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. If Helen then be wife to Sparta's king, As it is known she is, these moral laws Of nature and of nations speak aloud To have her back return'd: thus to persist In doing wrong extenuates not wrong, But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion

Is this in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless,
My spritely brethren, I propend to you
In resolution to keep Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependance
Upon our joint and several dignities.

Tro. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design:
Were it not glory that we more affected
Than the performance of our heaving spleens,
I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood
Spent more in her defense. But, worthy Hector.

She is a theme of honor and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds, 200
Whose present courage may beat down our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize us:

202. "canonize us"; the expression must not be taken literally.

Act II. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose So rich advantage of a promised glory As smiles upon the forehead of this action For the wide world's revenue.

Hect. I am yours,

You valiant offspring of great Priamus. I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits:
I was advertised their great general slept, 211
Whilst emulation in the army crept:
This, I presume, will wake him. [Execunt.

SCENE III

The Grecian camp. Before the tent of Achilles. Enter Thersites, solus.

Ther. How now, Thersites! what, lost in the labyrinth of thy fury! Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O, worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me. 'Sfoot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spiteful execrations. Then there's Achilles, a rare enginer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Jove, the king of gods, and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy caduceus, if ye take not that little little less than little wit from them that they have! which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons and cut- 20 ting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather, the Neapolitan bone-ache! for that, methinks, is the curse dependant on those that war for a placket. I have said my prayers; and devil Envv sav amen. What, ho! my Lord Achilles!

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites! Good Thersites, come in and rail.

Ther. If I could ha' remembered a gilt counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of 30 my contemplation: but it is no matter; thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a

Patr. What, art thou devout? wast thou in prayer?

Ther. Aye; the heavens hear me! Patr. Amen.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where? Art thou come? why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come, what 's Agamemnon?

50

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles: then tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites: then tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus: then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayst tell that knowest.

Achil. O, tell, tell.

Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my 60 lord; I am Patroclus' knower, and Patroclus is a fool.

Patr. You rascal!

Ther. Peace, fool! I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileged man. Proceed, Thersites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Thersites is a fool, and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this; come.

70

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.

Patr. Why am I a fool?

Ther. Make that demand of the prover. It suffices me thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody. 80 Come in with me, Thersites. [Exit.

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling and such knavery! all the argument is a cuck-old and a whore; a good quarrel to draw emulous factions and bleed to death upon. Now, the dry serpigo on the subject! and war and lechery confound all! [Exit.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Diomedes, and Ajax.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his tent; but ill-disposed, my lord.

75. "positive"; absolutely, under all conditions, not in respect of particular actions.—C. H. H.

Act II. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here. 90 He shent our messengers; and we lay by Our appertainments, visiting of him:

Let him be told so, lest perchance he think We dare not move the question of our place, Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall say so to him. [Exit.

Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent: He is not sick.

'Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart: you may call it melancholy, if you will favor the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: but 100 why, why? let him show us the cause. A word, my lord. [Takes Agamemnon aside.

Nest. What moves Ajax thus to bay at him? Ulyss. Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.

Nest. Who, Thersites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No, you see, he is his argument that has 110 his argument, Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish than their faction: but it was a strong composure a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily untie.

Re-enter Patroclus.

91. "He shent our," Theobald's emendation; Q. reads "He sate our"; Ff., "He sent our."—I. G.

Here comes Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not 120 for flexure.

Patr. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry,
If anything more than your sport and pleasure
Did move your greatness and this noble state
To call upon him; he hopes it is no other
But for your health and your digestion sake,
An after-dinner's breath.

We are too well acquainted with these answers:
But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn,
Cannot outfly our apprehensions. 130
Much attribute he hath, and much the reason
Why we ascribe it to him: yet all his virtues,
Not virtuously on his own part beheld,
Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss,
Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish,
Are like to rot untasted. Go and tell him,
We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin,

If you do say we think him over-proud And under-honest; in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself

<sup>193. &</sup>quot;Not virtuously on his own part beheld"; not regarded as becomes a virtuous man, i. s. modestly.—C. H. H.

<sup>140. &</sup>quot;Than in the note of judgment"; than true judges know him to be.—C. H. H.

Act II. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on, Disguise the holy strength of their command, And underwrite in an observing kind His humorous predominance; yea, watch His pettish lunes, his ebbs, his flows, as if The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Go tell him this, and add, That if he overhold his price so much, We'll none of him, but let him, like an engine Not portable, lie under this report:

150
'Bring action hither, this cannot go to war: A stirring dwarf we do allowance give Before a sleeping giant:' tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.

Exit.

Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied;
We come to speak with him. Ulysses, enter
you. [Exit Ulysses.

Ajax. What is he more than another?

Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.

Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think he thinks himself a better man than I am? 160

Agam. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought and say he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.

Agam. Your mind is the clearer, Ajax, and 156. "Enter you"; so Ff.; Q. reads "entertaine."-I. G.

your virtues the fairer. He that is proud <sup>170</sup> eats up himself: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.

Nest. [Aside] Yet he loves himself: is 't not strange?

Re-enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.

Agam. What 's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none,
But carries on the stream of his dispose,
Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request,
Untent his person, and share the air with us?
Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only

He makes important: possess'd he is with greatness,

And speaks not to himself but with a pride That quarrels at self-breath: imagined worth Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse That 'twixt his mental and his active parts 190 Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages And batters down himself: what should I say?

Act II. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

He is so plaguy proud that the death-tokens of it

Cry 'No recovery.'

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.

Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent: 'Tis said he holds you well, and will be led At your request a little from himself.

Illuse O A comemon let it not be so!

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!
We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes
When they go from Achilles. Shall the proud lord

That bastes his arrogance with his own seam, And never suffers matter of the world Enter his thoughts, save such as do revolve And ruminate himself, shall he be worship'd Of that we hold an idol more than he? No, this thrice worthy and right valiant lord Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquired, Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit, As amply titled as Achilles is, By going to Achilles:

That were to enlard his fat-already pride, And add more coals to Cancer when he burns With entertaining great Hyperion. This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid,

And say in thunder 'Achilles go to him.'

Nest. [Aside] O, this is well; he rubs the vein of him.

Dio. [Aside] And how his silence drinks up this applause!

Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed fist I'll pash him o'er the face.

Agam. O, no, you shall not go.

Ajax. An a' be proud with me, I'll pheeze his pride:

Let me go to him.

Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!

Nest. [Aside] How he describes himself!

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulyss. [Aside] The raven chides blackness.

Ajax. I'll let his humors blood.

Agam. [Aside] He will be the physician that should be the patient.

Ajax. An all men were o' my mind,—

Ulyss. [Aside] Wit would be out of fashion.

Ajax. A' should not bear it so, a' should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. [Aside] An 'twould, you 'ld carry half.

Ulyss. [Aside] A' would have ten shares.

Ajax. I will knead him, I'll make him supple.

Nest. [Aside] He's not yet through warm: force him with praises: pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry. 240

Uluss. [To Agamemnon] My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so. 65

Act II. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles. Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—but 'tis before his face; I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so? He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall palter thus with us! Would he were a Trojan! 250

Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now—

Ulyss. If he were proud,—

Dio. Or covetous of praise,—

Ulyss. Aye, or surly borne,—

Dio. Or strange, or self-affected!

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure;

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee suck:

Famed be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature Thrice-famed beyond, beyond all erudition: But he that disciplined thine arms to fight, 260 Let Mars divide eternity in twain, And give him half: and, for thy vigor, Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom, Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines Thy spacious and dilated parts: here 's Nestor, Instructed by the antiquary times, <sup>265.</sup> A "bourn" is a boundary, and sometimes a rivulet, dividing one place from another. A bourn, or burn, in the north, signifies a brook, or rivulet. Hence the names of many villages, &c., terminate—H. N. H.

'Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Nest. Aye, my good son.

Dio. Be ruled by him, Lord Ajax.

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the hart Achilles

Keeps thicket. Please it our great general

To call together all his state of war:

Fresh kings are come to Troy: to-morrow

We must with all our main of power stand fast: And here's a lord, come knights from east to west, 279

Serv. I hope I shall know your honor better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace.

At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That 's to 't, indeed, sir: marry, sir, at the request of Paris my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul.

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen: could not you find out that by her attributes?

Helen. Aye, aye, prithee now. By my troth, sweet lord, thou hast a fine forehead.

Pan. Aye, you may, you may.

Helen. Let thy song be love: this love will undo us all. O Cupid, Cupid, Cupid!

Pan. Love! aye, that it shall, i' faith.

Par. Aye, good now, love, love, nothing but love.

Pan. In good troth, it begins so. [Sings.

120

Love, love, nothing but love, still more!

For, O, love's bow Shoots buck and doe: The shaft confounds, Not that it wounds.

But tickles still the sore.

These lovers cry Oh! oh! they die: 130
Yet that which seems the wound to kill,

Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!

So dying love lives still:

Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha! Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha! Heigh-ho!

Helen. In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love, and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot 140 thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

124. The reading of Ff.; omitted in Q.—I. G.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, hot thoughts and hot deeds? Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's afield to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have armed to-day, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus 150 went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something: you know all, Lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen. I long to hear how they sped to-day. You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen.

[Exit. 160

[A retreat sounded.

Par. They're come from field: let us to Priam's hall,

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you

To help unarm our Hector; his stubborn buckles.

With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd,

Shall more obey than to the edge of steel

Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings,—disarm great Hector.

Act III. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Helen. 'Twill make us proud to be his servant, Paris;

Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty

Gives us more palm in beauty than we have, 170 Yea, overshines ourself.

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Exeunt.

Scene II

An orchard to Pandarus' house.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus' Boy, meeting.

Pan. How now! where 's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Boy. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Pan. O, here he comes.

Enter Troilus.

How now, how now!

Tro. Sirrah, walk off.

[Exit Boy.

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,

Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks 10 Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon, And give me swift transportance to those fields

Where I may wallow in the lily-beds

Proposed for the deserver! O gentle Pandarus,

From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings, And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here i' the orchard, I'll bring her [Exit. straight.

Tro. I am giddy; expectation whirls me round. The imaginary relish is so sweet That it enchants my sense: what will it be, When that the watery palates taste indeed Love's thrice repured nectar? death, I fear me, Swounding destruction, or some joy too fine, Too subtle-potent, tuned too sharp in sweetness, For the capacity of my ruder powers: I fear it much, and I do fear besides That I shall lose distinction in my joys, As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps The enemy flying.

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were fraved with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath as short as a new-ta'en sparrow. [Exit.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom: My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse; And all my powers do their bestowing lose, Like vassalage at unawares encountering 40 The eye of majesty.

Re-enter Pandarus with Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame 's a baby. Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me.

Act III. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

What, are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills. Why do you not speak to her? Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas 50 the day, how loath you are to offend daylight! an 'twere dark, you'ld close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress. How now! a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter; the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' the river: go to, go to.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but 60 she 'll bereave you o' the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here 's 'In witness whereof the parties interchangeably'—Come in, come in: I 'll go get a fire.

Cres. Will vou walk in, my lord?

62. "billing"; a play on the legal sense of "bill" as in "deeds" above.—C. H. H.

63. "I witness whereof"; Shakespeare had here an idea in his thoughts that he has elsewhere often expressed. Thus in Measure for Measure:

"But my kisses bring again,

Seals of love, but seal'd in vain."

And in Venus and Adonis:

"Pure lips sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted, What bargains may I make still to be sealing?"

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act III. Sc. ii.

- Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wished me thus!
- Cres. Wished, my lord?—The gods grant—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption? What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

- Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.
- Tro. Fears make devils of cherubins; they never see truly.
- Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling 80 without fear: to fear the worst oft cures the worse.
- Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.
- Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstruosity in love, lady, that the will is infinite and the execution confined, that the desire is boundless and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform, vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. 100 They that have the voice of lions and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are there such? such are not we: praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert before his birth, and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid as what envy 110 can say worst shall be a mock for his truth, and what truth can speak truest, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him me. Be true to my 120 lord: if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too: our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant being won: they are burs, I can tell you; they 'll stick where they are thrown.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act III. Sc. ii.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart.

Prince Troilus, I have loved you night and day For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won: but I was won, my lord, With the first glance that ever—pardon me;

If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.

I love you now; but not, till now, so much

But I might master it: in faith, I lie;

My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown

Too headstrong for their mother. See, we fools!

Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us, 140

When we are so unsecret to ourselves?

But, though I loved you well, I woo'd you not;

And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man,

Or that we women had men's privilege

Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue:

For in this rapture I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent. See, see, your silence,
Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness draws
My very soul of counsel! Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence. 150 Pan. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me; 'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kiss: I am ashamed; O heavens! what have I done?

Act III. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

160

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try:

I have a kind of self resides with you, But an unkind self that itself will leave To be another's fool. I would be gone: Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak that speak so wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more craft than love,

And fell so roundly to a large confession 170 To angle for your thoughts: but you are wise; Or else you love not, for to be wise and love Exceeds man's might; that dwells with gods above.

Tro. O that I thought it could be in a woman—As, if it can, I will presume in you—To feed for aye her lamp and flames of love; To keep her constancy in plight and youth, Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind That doth renew swifter than blood decays! Might be affronted with the match and weight Of such a winnowed purity in love; How were I then uplifted! but, alas! I am as true as truth's simplicity, And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I 'll war with you. Tro.

O virtuous fight,
When right with right wars who shall be most right!

True swains in love shall in the world to come Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes, 190

Cres. Prophet may you be!

If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth, 200 When time is old and hath forgot itself, When waterdrops have worn the stones of Troy,

And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up, And mighty states characterless are grated To dusty nothing, yet let memory, From false to false, among false maids in love,

Pan. Go to, a bargain made: seal it, seal it; I'll be the witness. Here I hold your hand; here my cousin's. If ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name; call them all Pandars; let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressids, 220 and all brokers-between Pandars! #### SCENE III.

The Grecian camp.

Flourish. Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor, Ajax, Menelaus, and Calchas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you,
The advantage of the time prompts me aloud
To call for recompense. Appear it to your mind

That, through the sight I bear in things to love, I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession, Incurr'd a traitor's name; exposed myself, From certain and possess'd conveniences, To doubtful fortunes; sequestering from me all That time, acquaintance, custom and condition Made tame and most familiar to my nature, <sup>10</sup> And here, to do you service, am become As new into the world, strange, unacquainted:

4. "through the sight I bear in things to love"; (?) "through my peculiar knowledge as to where it is well to place affection"; Johnson proposed "Jove" for "love," reading, "through the sight I bear in things, to Jove I have abandoned," &c., but Jove favored the Trojans. No very satisfactory explanation has been advanced.— I. G.

12. "Into" for unto; a common expression in old writers. Thus in Paston's Letters: "And they that have justed with him into this day have been as richly beseen."—Here again we trace the Poet's reading in Chaucer's Troilus and Cresside, Book i.:

"So when this Calcas knew by calculing,
And eke by the answere of this god Apollo,
That the Greekes should such a people bring,
Thorow the which that Troy must be fordo,
He cast anone out of the toune to go;
For well he wist by sort, that Troie shoulde
Destroyed be, ye would whoso or n'olde.

Act III. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

Agam. What wouldst thou of us, Trojan? make demand.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor, Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear. Oft have you—often have you thanks therefore—

Desired my Cressid in right great exchange, Whom Troy hath still denied: but this Antenor, I know, is such a wrest in their affairs, That their negotiations all must slack, Wanting his manage; and they will almost Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam, In change of him: let him be sent, great princes, And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence Shall quite strike off all service I have done, In most accepted pain.

"Wherefore he to departen softely
Tooke purpose full, this foreknowing wise,
And to the Greekes host full prively
He stale anone; and they in courteous wise
Did unto him both worship and servise
In trust that he hath cunning hem to rede
In every perill, which that was to drede.

"Great rumour rose, whan it was first espied,
In all the toune, and openly was spoken,
That Calcas traitour fled was and alied
To hem of Greece; and cast was to be wroken
On him that falsely hath his faith broken,
And sayed, he and all his kinne atones
Were worthy to be brent, both fell and bones."—H. N. H.

21. "in right great exchange"; i. e. offering a Trojan prisoner of great distinction in exchange for her.—C. H. H.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act III. Sc. iii.

Let Diomedes bear him, Agam. And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have What he requests of us. Good Diomed, Furnish you fairly for this interchange: Withal, bring word if Hector will to-morrow Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready. Dio. This shall I undertake: and 'tis a burthen

Which I am proud to bear.

Exeunt Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus, before their tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands i' the entrance of his tent: Please it our general pass strangely by him, As if he were forgot; and, princes all, Lay negligent and loose regard upon him: I will come last. 'Tis like he'll question me Why such unplausive eyes are bent on him: If so, I have derision medicinable. To use between your strangeness and his pride. Which his own will shall have desire to drink. It may do good: pride hath no other glass To show itself but pride, for supple knees Feed arrogance and are the proud man's fees.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose and put on 50 A form of strangeness as we pass along; So do each lord, and either greet him not Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me?

<sup>30. &</sup>quot;In most accepted pain," = trouble willingly undergone. Hanmer suggested "pay" for "pain."—I. G.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act III. Sc. iii.

You know my mind; I'll fight no more 'gainst Trov. Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us? Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general? Achil. No. Nest. Nothing, my lord. 60 Agam. The better. [Exeunt Agamemnon and Nestor. Achil. Good day, good day. Men. How do you? how do you? [Exit. Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me? Ajax. How now, Patroclus! Achil. Good morrow, Ajax. Ajax. Ha? Achil. Good morrow. Ajax. Aye, and good next day too. Exit. Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles? Patr. They pass by strangely: they were used to bend. To send their smiles before them to Achilles.

To come as humbly as they used to creep

To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late? 'Tis certain, greatness, once fall'n out with fortune.

Must fall out with men too: what the declined is. He shall as soon read in the eyes of others As feel in his own fall: for men, like butterflies. Show not their mealy wings but to the summer:

And not a man, for being simply man,

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act III. Sc. iii.

Hath any honor, but honor for those honors That are without him, as place, riches, and favor,

Prizes of accident as oft as merit:

Which when they fall, as being slippery standers,

The love that lean'd on them as slippery too,
Do one pluck down another and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,
Save these men's looks; who do, methinks, find out

Something not worth in me such rich beholding

As they have often given. Here is Ulysses: I'll interrupt his reading.

How now, Ulysses!

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son! Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here Writes me: 'That man, how dearly ever parted, How much in having, or without or in, Cannot make boast to have that which he hath, Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection; As when his virtues shining upon others 100 Heat them, and they retort that heat again To the first giver.'

Achil. This is not strange, Ulysses.

The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself

Act III. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

To others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye opposed
Salutes each other with each other's form:
For speculation turns not to itself,
Till it hath travel'd and is mirror'd there

110
Where it may see itself. This is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position—
It is familiar—but at the author's drift;
Who in his circumstance expressly proves
That no man is the lord of any thing,
Though in and of him there be much consisting,
Till he communicate his parts to others;
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught,
Till he behold them formed in the applause
Where they 're extended; who, like an arch, reverberates

The voice again; or, like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this;

And apprehended here immediately The unknown Ajax.

Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse; That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,

Most abject in regard and dear in use! What things again most dear in the esteem

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act III. Sc. iii.

And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow—

An act that very chance doth throw upon him—Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do, While some men leave to do! How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall, Whiles others play the idiots in her eyes! How one man eats into another's pride, While pride is fasting in his wantonness! To see these Grecian lords! Why, even already

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder, As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast 140

And great Troy shricking.

Achil. I do believe it; for they pass'd by me
As misers do by beggars, neither gave to me
Good word nor look: what, are my deeds forgot?

Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,

A great-sized monster of ingratitudes:

Those scraps are good deeds past, which are devour'd

As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honor bright: to have done, is to hang

137. "fasting"; so in the quarto; the folio has feasting. Johnson thought either word would do well enough: but fasting is evidently better for the designed antithesis between this and the preceding line.—H. N. H.

141. "shricking"; the folio reads shrinking. The following passage in the subsequent scene seems to favor the reading of the quarto:

"Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out!

How poor Andromache shrills her dolours forth!—

And all cry—Hector, Hector's dead."—H. N. H.

Act III. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;

For honor travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast: keep then the path;
For emulation hath a thousand sons
That one by one pursue: if you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by
And leave you hindmost:

160
Or, like a gallant horse fall'n in first rank,
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
O'er-run and trampled on: then what they do in present,

Though less than yours in past, must o'ertop yours;

For time is like a fashionable host

That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand.

And with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly, Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles.

And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue seek 170

Remuneration for the thing it was; For beauty, wit,

High birth, vigor of bone, desert in service, Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all

To envious and calumniating time.

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin;

175. "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin," i. e. one touch of human nature, one natural trait, shows the kinship of all mankind, viz. that they praise new-born gawds, and are always hankering after novelty.—I. G.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act III. Sc. iii.

That all with one consent praise new-born gawds,

Though they are made and moulded of things past,

And give to dust that is a little gilt More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.

More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.

The present eye praises the present object: 180

Then marvel not, thou great and complete man,

That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax;

Since things in motion sooner catch the eye

Than what not stirs. The cry went once on thee,

And still it might, and yet it may again,
If thou wouldst not entomb thyself alive
And case thy reputation in thy tent,
Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,

And drave great Mars to faction.

Achil. Of this my privacy 190 I have strong reasons.

Ulyss. But 'gainst your privacy
The reasons are more potent and heroical:
'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love
With one of Priam's daughters.

Achil. Ha! known?

Ulyss. Is that a wonder?

The providence that's in a watchful state Knows almost every grain of Plutus' gold, Finds bottom in the uncomprehensive deeps,

194. "one of Priam's daughters"; i. e. "Polyxena, in the act of marrying whom she was afterwards killed by Paris."—I. G.

Act III. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Keeps place with thought, and almost like the gods

Does thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. 200

There is a mystery, with whom relation

Durst never meddle, in the soul of state;

Which hath an operation more divine

Than breath or pen can give expressure to:

All the commerce that you have had with Troy

As perfectly is ours as yours, my lord;

And better would it fit Achilles much

To throw down Hector than Polyxena:

But it must grieve young Pyrrhus now at home,

When fame shall in our islands sound her trump;

And all the Greekish girls shall tripping sing 'Great Hector's sister did Achilles win,
But our great Ajax bravely beat down him.'
Farewell, my lord: I as your lover speak;
The fool slides o'er the ice that you should break.

[Exit.]

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I moved you:
A woman impudent and mannish grown
Is not more loathed than an effeminate man
In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this;
They think my little stomach to the war 220
And your great love to me restrains you thus:

200. "dumb cradles"; that is, in their infancy, and before they can give themselves utterance; as we know men often act out their thoughts before they express them, and even before they are fully conscious of having them; some pre-existing impulse being in fact the seed of the thought. Mr. Collier found crudities substituted for cradles, among his late discoveries; and he crows over it somewhat unwisely, as it seems to us.—H. N. H.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act III. Sc. iii.

Sweet, rouse yourself, and the weak wanton Cupid

Shall from your neck unloose his amorous fold, And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane, Be shook to air.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

Patr. Aye, and perhaps receive much honor by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake;

My fame is shrewdly gored.

Patr. O, then, beware; Those wounds heal ill that men do give them-

Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves:

Omission to do what is necessary

Seals a commission to a blank of danger;

And danger, like an ague, subtly taints

Even then when we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus:

I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
To invite the Trojan lords after the combat
To see us here unarm'd: I have a woman's longing,

An appetite that I am sick withal, To see great Hector in his weeds of peace; To talk with him, and to behold his visage, 240 Even to my full of view.—A labor saved!

Enter Thersites.

241. "to my full view"; so in Caxton's History: "The truce during, Hector went on a day unto the tents of the Greekes, and Achilles beheld him gladly, forasmuch as he had never seen him unarmed. And at the request of Achilles, Hector went into his tent; and as they spake together of many things, Achilles said to Hector, I have great pleasure to see thee unarmed, forasmuch as I have never seen thee before."—H. N. H.

Act III. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field, asking for himself.

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector, and is so prophetically proud of an heroical cudgeling that he raves in saying nothing.

250

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why, a' stalks up and down like a peacock.—a stride and a stand: ruminates like an hostess that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say 'There were wit in this head, an 'twould out:' and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for 260 if Hector break not his neck i' the combat. he'll break 't himself in vain-glory. He knows not me: I said 'Good morrow, Ajax;' and he replies 'Thanks, Agamemnon.' What think you of this man, that takes me for the general? He's grown a very landfish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, 270 Thersites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering: speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in 's arms. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my 280 tent, and to procure safe-conduct for his person of the magnanimous and most illustrious six-or-seven-times-honored captaingeneral of the Grecian army, Agamemnon, et cetera. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax!

Ther. Hum!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite 290 Hector to his tent,—

Ther. Hum!

Patr. And to procure safe-conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. Aye, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to 't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven of the clock it will go one way or other: howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

300

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Act III. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

- Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

  Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not; but, I am sure, none, unless the fiddler Apollo get 310 his sinews to make catlings on.
- Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.
- Ther. Let me bear another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.
- Achil. My mind is troubled like a fountain stirr'd,
  And I myself see not the bottom of it.

  [Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus.
- Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it!

  I had rather be a tick in a sheep than such 320 a valiant ignorance.

  [Exit.

ACT FOURTH

Troy. A street.

Enter, at one side, Æneas, and Servant with a torch; at the other, Paris, Deiphobus, Antenor, Diomedes, and others, with torches.

Par. See, ho! who is that there?

Dei. It is the Lord Æneas.

Æne. Is the prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lie long

As you, Prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business

Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Dio. That's my mind too. Good morrow, Lord Æneas.

Par. A valiant Greek, Æneas,—take his hand,—Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told how Diomed a whole week by days Did haunt you in the field.

Ene. Health to you, valiant sir,

During all question of the gentle truce;

But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance

As heart can think or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.

Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long, heal<sup>+1</sup>

'Act IV. Sc. i. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

But when contention and occasion meet, By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life With all my force, pursuit and policy.

Ene. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly
With his face backward. In humane gentleness, 20

Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises' life, Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear, No man alive can love in such a sort The thing he means to kill more excellently.

Dio. We sympathize. Jove, let Æneas live,
If to my sword his fate be not the glory,
A thousand complete courses of the sun!
But, in mine emulous honor, let him die,
With every joint a wound, and that to-morrow.

Æne. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despiteful gentle greeting, The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of. What business, lord, so early?

Zene. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you: 'twas to bring this Greek

To Calchas' house; and there to render him, For the enfreed Antenor, the fair Cressid: Let's have your company, or, if you please, Haste there before us. I constantly do think, 40 Or rather, call my thought a certain knowledge, <sup>36. &</sup>quot;his purpose meets you"; that is, I bring you his meaning and his orders.—H. N. H.

My brother Troilus lodges there to-night: Rouse him and give him note of our approach, With the whole quality wherefore: I fear We shall be much unwelcome.

Ene. That I assure you:

Troilus had rather Troy were borne to Greece Than Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There is no help;

The bitter disposition of the time

Will have it so. On, lord, we'll follow you.

Ene. Good morrow, all.

[Exit with Servant.

Par. And tell me, noble Diomed, faith, tell me true, Even in the soul of sound good-fellowship, Who, in your thoughts, deserves fair Helen best, Myself or Menelaus?

Dio. Both alike:

He merits well to have her that doth seek her,
Not making any scruple of her soilure,
With such a hell of pain and world of charge
And you as well to keep her, that defend her,
Not palating the taste of her dishonor,
With such a costly loss of wealth and friends: 60
He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece;
You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleased to breed out your inheritors:
Both merits poised, each weighs nor less nor more,

But he as he, the heavier for a whore. Par. You are too bitter to your countrywoman.

Act IV. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Dio. She's bitter to her country: hear me, Paris:
For every false drop in her bawdy veins
A Grecian's life hath sunk; for every scruple 70
Of her contaminated carrion weight,
A Trojan hath been slain: since she could speak,
She hath not given so many good words breath
As for her Greeks and Trojans suffer'd death.

Par. Fair Diomed, you do as chapmen do,
Dispraise the thing that you desire to buy:
But we in silence hold this virtue well,
We'll not commend what we intend to sell.
Here lies our way.

[Exeunt.

Scene II

Court of Pandarus' house.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Tro. Dear, trouble not yourself: the morn is cold. Cres. Then, sweet my lord, I'll call mine uncle down:

He shall unbolt the gates.

Tro. Trouble him not;
To bed, to bed: sleep kill those pretty eyes,
And give as soft attachment to thy senses

As infants' empty of all thought!

Cres. Good morrow, then;

Tro. I prithee now, to bed.

Cres. Are you a-weary of me?

Tro. O Cressida! but that the busy day,

5. "attachment"; arrest, seizure.-C. H. H.

30

Waked by the lark, hath roused the ribald crows, And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer, 10

I would not from thee.

Night hath been too brief. Cres.

Tro. Beshrew the witch! with venomous wights she stavs

As tediously as hell, but flies the grasps of love With wings more momentary-swift than thought.

You will catch cold, and curse me.

Prithee, tarry: Cres.

You men will never tarry.

O foolish Cressid! I might have still held off, And then you would have tarried. there's one up.

Pan. [Within] What, 's all the doors open here? Tro. It is your uncle. 20

Cres. A pestilence on him! now will he be mocking: I shall have such a life!

Enter Pandarus

Pan. How now, how now! how go maidenheads? Here, vou maid! where 's my cousin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang yourself, you naughty mocking uncle! You bring me to do—and then you flout me too.

Pan. To do what? to do what? let her say what: what have I brought you to do?

Cres. Come, come, beshrew your heart! you'll ne'er be good, nor suffer others.

'Act IV. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! ah, poor capocchia! hast not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him!

Cres. Did not I tell you? would he were knocked i' the head! [One knocks.

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.

My lord, come you again into my chamber.

You smile and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceived, I think of no such thing. [Knocking.

How earnestly they knock! Pray you, come in: I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exeunt Troilus and Cressida.

Pan. Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now! what's the matter?

Enter Æneas.

Æne. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my Lord Æneas! By my troth,

I knew you not: what news with you so early? 50 Æne. Is not prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Enc. Come, he is here, my lord; do not deny him:

It doth import him much to speak with me. Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know,

I'll be sworn: for my own part, I came in late. What should he do here?

**Ene. Who! nay, then: come, come, you'll do him wrong ere you are ware: you'll be so true to him, to be false to him: do not you know of him, but yet go fetch him hither; go.

Re-enter Troilus.

Tro. How now! what 's the matter?

Ene. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash: there is at hand
Paris your brother and Deiphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor
Deliver'd to us; and for him forthwith,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour,
We must give up to Diomedes' hand
The Lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Ene. By Priam and the general state of Troy.

They are at hand and ready to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!

I will go meet them: and, my Lord Æneas,
We met by chance; you did not find me here.

70. "give up to Diomedes' hand"; in Caxton's History this part of the story is told thus: "Calcas, that by the commandment of Apollo had left the Trojans, had a passing faire daughter and wise, named Briseyda,—Chaucer, in his book that he made of Iroylus, named her Cresida;—for which daughter he prayed to king Agamemnon and to the other princes, that they would require the king Priamus to send Briseyda unto him. They prayed enough to king Priamus at the instance of Calcas; but the Trojans blamed sore Calcas, and called him evil and false traitor, and worthis to die, that had left his owne land and naturall lord, for to goe into the companie of his mortal enemies: yet, at the petition and earnest desire of the Greekes, the king Priamus sent Briseyda to her father."—H. N. H.

Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exeunt Troilus and Æneas.

Pan. Is 't possible? no sooner got but lost?

The devil take Antenor! the young prince 80 will go mad: a plague upon Antenor! I would they had broke 's neck!

Re-enter Cressida.

Cres. How now! what's the matter? who was here?

Pan. Ah, ah!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where 's my lord? gone! Tell me, sweet uncle, what 's the matter?

Pan. Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Cres. O the gods! What's the matter?

Pan. Prithee, get thee in: would thou hadst ne'er been born! I knew thou wouldst be his death: O, poor gentleman! A plague upon Antenor!

Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you, on my knees I beseech you, what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone, wench, thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor: thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus: 'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.

77. "secrets of nature"; so Ff.; Q., "secrets of neighbor Pandar"; Theobald, "secret'st things of nature"; Hanmer, "secretest of natures," &c., &c.—I. G.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act IV. Sc. iii.

Cres. O you immortal gods! I will not go.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father;

I know no touch of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me

As the sweet Troilus. O you gods divine!

Make Cressid's name the very crown of false-hood,

If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death, 110

Do to this body what extremes you can;

But the stronge base and building of my love

Is as the very center of the earth,

Drawing all things to it. I'll go in and weep,—

Pan. Do. do.

Cres. Tear my bright hair and scratch my praised cheeks.

Crack my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart

With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exeunt.

Before Pandarus' house.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Æneas, Deiphobus, Antenor, and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the hour prefix'd For her delivery to this valiant Greek

Act IV. Sc. iv. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Comes fast upon: good my brother Troilus, Tell you the lady what she is to do, And haste her to the purpose.

Tro. Walk into her house;

I 'll bring her to the Grecian presently: And to his hand when I deliver her, Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus A priest, there offering to it his own heart.

Par. I know what 'tis to love; 10
And would, as I shall pity, I could help!
Please you walk in, my lords. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV

'A room in Pandarus' house. Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?

The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste.

And violenteth in a sense as strong

As that which causeth it: how can I moderate it?

If I could temporize with my affection,
Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
The like allayment could I give my grief:
My love admits no qualifying dross;
No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act IV. Sc. iv.

Enter Troilus.

Pan.	Here,	here,	here	he	comes.	Ah,	sweet
· dı	ıcks!

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus! [Embracing him. Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too. 'O heart,' as the goodly saying is,

'O heart, heavy heart, Why sigh'st thou without breaking? where he answers again,

'Because thou canst not ease thy smart

By friendship nor by speaking.' There was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it. How now, lambs!

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity. That the blest gods, as angry with my fancy, More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities, take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods envy?

20

Pan. Aye, aye, aye, aye; 'tis too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

What, and from Troilus too? Cres. Tro. From Troy and Troilus.

Cres. Is it possible?

Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips

Act IV. Sc. iv. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents
Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows
Even in the birth of our own laboring breath: 40
We two, that with so many thousand sighs
Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves
With the rude brevity and discharge of one.
Injurious time now with a robber's haste
Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how:
As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to

He fumbles up into a loose adieu,

50

And scants us with a single famish'd kiss, Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Æne. [Within] My lord, is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: some say the Genius so Cries 'Come!' to him that instantly must die.

Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root. [Exit.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woeful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!
When shall we see again?

59

Tro. Hear me, my love: be thou but true of heart. Cres. I true! how now! what wicked deem is this?

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,

For it is parting from us:

I speak not 'be thou true,' as fearing thee;

For I will throw my glove to Death himself, That there 's no maculation in thy heart: But 'be thou true' say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation; be thou true, And I will see thee.

69

Cres. O, you shall be exposed, my lord, to dangers As infinite as imminent: but I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you? Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,

To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens! 'Be true' again!

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love:

The Grecian youths are full of quality;

They're loving, well composed with gifts of nature,

And flowing o'er with arts and exercise:

How novelties may move and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy—

"Wear this sleeve"; in a comedy, entitled "Histriomastix, or the Player Whipt," published in 1610, but written before the death of Elizabeth, there is a mock interlude wherein Troilus and Cressida are the speakers. The point of the burlesque turns on much the same action as is here represented. Some have thought, and apparently with good reason, that the thing may have been designed as a sort of travesty on this scene. Which, of course, is an argument, so far as it goes, that this play was originally written before 1603.—H. N. H.

O heavens! you love me not. Cres. Tro. Die I a villain then!

In this I do not call your faith in question, So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing, Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk, Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all, To which the Grecians are most prompt and 90 pregnant:

But I can tell that in each grace of these There lurks a still and dumb-discoursive devil That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No:

But something may be done that we will not: And sometimes we are devils to ourselves. When we will tempt the frailty of our powers, Presuming on their changeful potency.

Ene. [Within] Nay, good my lord!

Tro.Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within] Brother Troilus!

Tro.Good brother, come you hither;

And bring Æneas and the Grecian with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault:

Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,

I with great truth catch mere simplicity;

Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns.

With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act IV. Sc. iv.

Fear not my truth: the moral of my wit Is 'plain and true'; there 's all the reach of it. 110

Enter Æneas, Paris, Antenor, Deiphobus, and Diomedes.

Welcome, Sir Diomed! here is the lady Which for Antenor we deliver you: At the port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand; And by the way possess thee what she is. Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek, If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword, Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe As Priam is in Ilion.

Dio. Fair Lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:

The luster in your eye, heaven in your cheek, 120 Pleads your fair usage; and to Diomed You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the zeal of my petition to thee
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not, 129
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O, be not moved, Prince Troilus:

Let me be privileged by my place and message
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I'll answer to my lust: and know you, lord,

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act IV. Sc. v.

I'll nothing do on charge: to her own worth She shall be prized; but that you say 'Be't so,'

I'll speak it in my spirit and honor 'No!'

Tro. Come, to the port. I'll tell thee, Diomed, This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head. Lady, give me your hand: and, as we walk. 140 To our own selves bend we our needful talk.

[Exeunt Troilus, Cressida, and Diomedes.

[A trumpet sounds.

Par. Hark! Hector's trumpet.

Æne. How have we spent this morning! The prince must think me tardy and remiss, That swore to ride before him to the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault: come, come, to field with him.

Dei. Let us make ready straight.

Æne. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity, Let us address to tend on Hector's heels: The glory of our Troy doth this day lie 150 On his fair worth and single chivalry.

Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy, Thou dreadful Ajax, that the appalled air May pierce the head of the great combatant And hale him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there 's my purse. Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe: Blow, villain, till thy sphered bias cheek Outswell the colic of puff'd Aquilon: Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout 10 blood:

Thou blow'st for Hector. Trumpet sounds.

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

'Tis but early days. A chil.

Agam. Is not youd Diomed, with Calchas' daughter?

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait; He rises on the toe: that spirit of his In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter Diomedes, with Cressida.

Agam. Is this the Lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular; 'Twere better she were kiss'd in general.

Nest. And very courtly counsel: I'll begin. So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady:

Act IV. Sc. v. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now; For thus popp'd Paris in his hardiment,

And parted thus you and your argument.

Ulyss. O deadly gall, and theme of all our scorns! For which we lose our heads to gild his horns. 31

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss; this, mine: Patroclus kisses you.

Men. O, this is trim!

Patr. Paris and I kiss evermore for him.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir. Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing, do you render or receive?

Men. Both take and give.

Cres. I 'll make my match to live,

The kiss you take is better than you give; Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot, I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an odd man; give even, or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady! every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true, That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You fillip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulyss. It were no match, your nail against his horn.
May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you?

Cres. You may.

Ulyss. I do desire it.

29. Omitted in Ff.; the reading of Q.; Collier MS. reads "And parted you and your same argument."—I. G.

Ulyss. Why, then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,

Cres. I am your debtor; claim it when 'tis due.

Ulyss. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

[Exit with Cressida.

Nest. A woman of quick sense.

Ulyss. Fie, fie upon her!

O, these encounterers, so glib of tongue,

That give accosting welcome ere it comes,

What is your name?

If not Achilles, nothing. A chil.

Ene. Therefore Achilles: but, whate'er, know this:

In the extremity of great and little,

Valor and pride excel themselves in Hector:

The one almost as infinite as all.

The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well, And that which looks like pride is courtesy.

Uluss. The youngest son of Priam, a true knig Not yet mature, yet matchless, firm of word, Speaking in deeds and deedless in his tongue, Not soon provoked nor being provoked soon calm'd:

His heart and hand both open and both free; 100 For what he has he gives, what thinks he shows; Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty, Nor dignifies an impair thought with breath; Manly as Hector, but more dangerous; For Hector in his blaze of wrath subscribes To tender objects, but he in heat of action Is more vindicative than jealous love: They call him Troilus, and on him erect A second hope, as fairly built as Hector. Thus says Æneas; one that knows the youth 110 Even to his inches, and with private soul Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me.

 $\mathbf{P}_{1}$ Hector, thou sleep'st; Pwake thee!

h. His blows are well disposed: there, Ajax! Ag You must no more. Trumpets cease. Princes, enough, so please A'ax. I am not warm yet; let us fight again. Princes, enough, so please you.

o. As Hector pleases.

Why, then will I no more: ect.

'Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son, A cousin-german to great Priam's seed; The obligation of our blood forbids

A gory emulation 'twixt us twain:

Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so, That thou couldst say 'This hand is Grecian all,

And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg

All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood

Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister

Bounds in my father's; by Jove multipotent,

Thou shouldst not bear from me a Greekish 130 member

Wherein my sword had not impressure made Of our rank feud: but the just gods gainsay That any drop thou borrow'dst from thy mother.

My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword Be drained! Let me embrace thee, Ajax: By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms; Hector would have them fall upon him thus: Cousin, all honor to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee. Hector:

Thou art too gentle and too free a man: I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence A great addition earned in thy death.

Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable,

On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st Oves

Cries 'This is he,' could promise to himself

A thought of added honor torn from Hector.

Æne. There is expectance here from both the sides, What further you will do.

We'll answer it: Hect.

The issue is embracement: Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,— As seld I have the chance—I would desire 150 My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

Dio. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great Achilles Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to me:

And signify this loving interview

To the expecters of our Trojan part;

Desire them home. Give me thy hand, my cousin:

I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.

Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.

Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by name; But Achilles, my own searching eves

Shall find him by his large and portly size.

Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one

142. "Neoptolemus so mirable"; Hanmer reads "Neoptolemus sire so mirable"; Warburton, "Neoptolemus's sire irascible"; Collier conj. "Neoptolemus so admirable," &c.-I. G.

158. "see your knights"; these knights, to the amount of about two hundred thousand, Shakespeare found with all the appendages of chivalry in The Old Troy Book. Eques and armiger, rendered knight and squire, excite ideas of chivalry. Pope, in his Homehas been liberal in his use of the latter.—H. N. H.

Act IV. Sc. v. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

That would be rid of such an enemy;

But that 's no welcome: understand more clear,

What 's past and what 's to come is strew'd with husks

And formless ruin of oblivion;

But in this extant moment, faith and troth,

Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing,

Bids thee, with most divine integrity, 170

From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.

Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.

Agam. [To Troilus] My well-famed lord of Troy, no less to you.

Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting;

You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.

Hect. Who must we answer?

Ene. The noble Menelaus.

Hect. O, you, my lord! by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!

Mock not, that I affect the untraded oath;

Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove:

She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.

Men. Name her not now, sir; she 's a deadly theme.

Hect. O, pardon; I offend.

Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,

Laboring for destiny, make cruel way

Through ranks of Greekish youth; and I have seen thee,

As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,

Despising many forfeits and subduements, When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' the air,

Not letting it decline on the declined, That I have said to some my standers by 'Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!'

And I have seen thee pause and take thy breath, When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,

Like an Olympian wrestling: this have I seen; But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel, I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire, And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;

But, by great Mars the captain of us all, Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee; And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents. 200 Æne. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle, That hast so long walk'd hand and hand with time:

Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.

Nest. I would my arms could match thee in contention,

As they contend with thee in courtesy.

Hect. I would they could.

Nest. Ha!

By this white beard, I'ld fight thee to-morrow:

Well, welcome!—I have seen the time.

Act IV. Sc. v. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands, 211 When we have here her base and pillar by us.

Hect. I know your favor, Lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.

Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that pertly front your town,
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
220

Must kiss their own feet.

Hect. I must not believe you:
There they stand yet; and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all,
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.

Ulyss. So to him we leave it.

Most gentle and most valiant Hector, welcome:

After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me and see me at my tent.

Achil. I shall forestall thee, Lord Ulysses, thou! 230 Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee; I have with exact view perused thee, Hector, And quoted joint by joint.

233. "quoted" is observed, noted.—The incident of Achilles' viewing Hector "limb by limb" is narrated in Homer's twenty-second Book. We subjoin Chapman's version of the passage, though Shakespeare probably had not seen it when he wrote this play, as only the first nineteen Books of that version were published before 1611:

&quot;His bright and sparkling eyes " 'k'd through the body of his foe, and sought through all that prize

Hect. Is this Achilles?

Achil. I am Achilles.

Hect. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee. Achil. Behold thy fill.

Hect. Nay, I have done already.

Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second time, As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.

Hect. O, like a book of sport thou 'lt read me o'er; But there 's more in me than thou understand'st. Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye? 241

Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body

Shall I destroy him? whether there, or there, or there?

That I may give the local wound a name, And make distinct the very breach whereout

Hector's great spirit flew: answer me, heavens! Hect. It would discredit the blest gods, proud man,

To answer such a question: stand again:
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,
As to prenominate in nice conjecture

250
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achil. I tell thee, yea.

Hect. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,

The next way to his thirsted life. Of all ways, only one Appear'd to him; and this was, where th' unequal winding bone, That joins the shoulders and the neck, had place, and where there lay

The speeding way of death; and there his quick eye could display
The place it sought,—even through the arms his friend Patroclus wore

When Hector slew him."-H. N. H.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA Act IV. Sc. v.

I'ld not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well:

For I'll not kill thee there, nor there; But, by the forge that stithied Mars his helm, I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er. You wisest Grecians, pardon me this brag; His insolence draws folly from my lips; But I'll endeavor deeds to match these words, Or may I never-

Do not chafe thee, cousin: 260 Ajax. And you, Achilles, let these threats alone Till accident or purpose bring you to 't: You may have every day enough of Hector, If you have stomach: the general state, I fear, Can scarce entreat you to be odd with him.

Hect. I pray you, let us see you in the field: We have had pelting wars since you refused The Grecians' cause.

Achil. Dost thou entreat me. Hector? To-morrow do I meet thee, fell as death; To-night all friends.

Thy hand upon that match. 270 Hect. Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent:

There in the full convive we: afterwards. As Hector's leisure and your bounties shall Concur together, severally entreat him. Beat loud the taborines, let the trumpets blow, That this great soldier may his welcome know. Exeunt all but Troilus and Ulysses.

Tro. My Lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you, In what place of the field doth Calchas keep?

- Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus:
  There Diomed doth feast with him to-night; 280
  Who neither looks upon the heaven nor earth,
  But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
  On the fair Cressid.
- Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much, After we part from Agamemnon's tent, To bring me thither?
- Ulyss. You shall command me, sir.

  As gentle tell me, of what honor was
  This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there
  That wails her absence?
- Tro. O, sir, to such as boasting show their scars, 290 A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord? She was beloved, she loved; she is, and doth: But still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth. [Exeunt.

ACT FIFTH

SCENE I

The Grecian camp. Before Achilles' tent.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achil. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine tonight,

Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.

Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Thersites.

Enter Thersites.

Achil. How now, thou core of envy! Thou crusty batch of nature, what 's the news? Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol of idiot-worshipers, here 's a letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, fragment?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy. 10

Patr. Who keeps the tent now?

4. "core of envy"; so in the folio; in the quarto, "cur of envy," which is a very suitable epithet of the snarling and biting Thersites, and is elsewhere applied to him. It seems uncertain which is the better reading here. Of course "core of envy" is "heart of envy," and it has the advantage in variety, if in nothing else.—H. N. H.

5. A "batch" is all that is baked at one time, without heating the oven afresh. So Ben Jonson in his Cataline: "Except he were of the same meal and batch."—H. N. H.

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, adversity! and what need these tricks?

Ther. Prithee, be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk: thou art thought to be Achilles' male varlet.

Patr. Male varlet, you rogue! what's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now, the 20 rotten diseases of the south, the guts-griping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads o' gravel i' the back, lethargies, cold palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume, sciaticas, limekilns i' the palm, incurable bone-ache, and the riveled feesimple of the tetter, take and take again such preposterous discoveries!

Patr. Why, thou damnable box of envy, thou, what mean'st thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why, no, you ruinous butt; you whoreson indistinguishable cur, no.

Ther. No! why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleave silk, thou green sarcenet flap for a sore eye, thou tassel

12. "The surgeon's box"; in his answer Thersites quibbles upon the word tent.—H. N. H.

14. "adversity" is here used for contrariety; the reply of Thersites having been studiously adverse to the drift of the question urged by Patroclus.—H. N. H.

23-27. "raw . . . tetter," the reading of Q.; omitted in Ff., substituting "and the like."—I. G.

33. "indistinguishable"; Patroclus reproaches Thersites with deformity, with having one part crowded into another.—H. N. H.

Act V. Sc. i. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

of a prodigal's purse, thou? Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such waterflies, diminutives of nature!

Patr. Out, gall! Ther. Finch-egg!

40

Achil. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite
From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.
Here is a letter from Overn Hereba

Here is a letter from Queen Hecuba,
A token from her daughter, my fair love.
Both taxing me and gaging me to keep
An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:
Fall Greeks; fail fame; honor or go or stay;
My major vow lies here, this I'll obey.
Come, come, Thersites, help to trim my tent:
This night in banqueting must all be spent.
Away, Patroclus!

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus.

Ther. With too much blood and too little brain, these two may run mad; but, if with too much brain and too little blood they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon, an honest fellow enough and one that loves quails; but he has not so much brain as ear-wax: and the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull, the primitive statue and oblique memorial of cuckolds; a thrifty shoeing-horn in a chain, hanging at his brother's leg,—to what form

58. By "quails" are meant women, and probably those of a looser description. "Caille coeffée" is a sobriquet for a harlot. Chaud comme un caille is a French proverb; the quail being remarkably salacious.—H. N. H.

63. "hanging at his brother's leg"; so Ff.; Q. reads "at his bare G.

but that he is, should wit larded with malice and malice forced with wit turn him to? To an ass, were nothing; he is both ass and ox: to an ox, were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew, a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a roe, I would not care; but to be Menelaus! I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites; for I care not to be the louse of a lazar, so I were not Menelaus. Hoy-day! spirits and fires!

Enter Hector, Troilus, Ajax, Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Menelaus, and Diomedes, with lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No yonder 'tis;

There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Re-enter Achilles.

Ulyss. Here comes himself to guide you. Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So now, fair Prince of Troy, I bid good night.

Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks and good night to the Greeks' general.

Act V. Sc. i. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Men. Good night, my lord.

Hect. Good night, sweet Lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught: sweet, quoth a'! sweet sink, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night and welcome, both at once, to those

That go or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

[Exeunt Agamemnon and Menelaus.

Achil. Old Nestor tarries; and you too, Diomed, Keep Hector company an hour or two. 90

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business,
The tide whereof is now. Good night, great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

Ulyss. [Aside to Troilus] Follow his torch; he goes to Calchas' tent:

I'll keep you company.

Tro. Sweet, sir, you honor me.

Hect. And so, good night.

[Exit Diomedes; Ulysses and Troilus following. Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exeunt Achilles, Hector, Ajax, and Nestor.

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers than I will a ser-100 pent when he hisses: he will spend his mouth and promise, like Brabbler the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foretell it; it is prodigious, there will come some change;

the sun borrows of the moon when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector than not to dog him: they say he keeps a Trojan drab and uses the traitor Calchas' tent: I'll after. Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets! [Exit. 110]

Scene II

The same. Before Calchas' tent.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. What, are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed. Calchas, I think. Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within] She comes to you.

Enter Troilus and Ulysses, at a distance; after them, Thersites.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressida.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.

Dio. How now, my charge!

Cres. Now, my sweet guardian! Hark, a word with you. [Whispers.

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can 10 take her cliff; she's noted.

Act V. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Dio. Will you remember?

Cres. Remember! yes.

Dio. Nay, but do, then;

And let your mind be coupled with your words.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List.

Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,-

20

Cres. I'll tell you what,—

Dio. Foh, foh! come, tell a pin: you are forsworn.

Cres. In faith, I cannot: what would you have me do?

Ther. A juggling trick,—to be secretly open.

Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?

Cres. I prithee, do not hold me to mine oath;

Bid me do anything but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulyss. How now, Trojan!

30

Cres. Diomed,—

Dio. No, no, good night: I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cres. Hark, one word in your ear.

Tro. O plague and madness!

Ulyss. You are moved, prince; let us depart, I pray you,

Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself To wrathful terms: this place is dangerous;

The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.

Tro. Behold, I pray you!

Uluss. Nay, good my lord, go off: 40 You flow to great distraction; come, my lord.

Tro. I pray thee, stay.

You have not patience; come. Ulyss.

Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell and all hell's torments.

I will not speak a word.

And so, good night. Dio.

Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.

Doth that grieve thee?

O wither'd truth!

Uluss. Why, how now, lord!

Tro. By Jove,

I will be patient.

Guardian!—why, Greek! Cres.

Dio. Foh, foh! adieu; you palter.

Cres. In faith, I do not: come hither once again.

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something: will you go? 50

You will break out.

She strokes his cheek! Tro.

Come, come. Ulyss.

Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word:

There is between my will and all offenses

A guard of patience: stay a little while.

Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump and potato-finger, tickles these together! Frv, lechery, fry!

Dio. But will you, then?

Cres. In faith, I will, la; never trust me else.

Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it. 60 Exit.

Cres. I'll fetch you one.

Act V. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Ulyss. You have sworn patience.

Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord;

I will not be myself, nor have cognition Of what I feel: I am all patience.

Re-enter Cressida.

Tro. Now the pledge; now, now, now!

Cres. Here, Diomed, keep this sleeve.

Tro. O beauty! where is thy faith?

Ulyss. My lord,—

Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will.

Cres. You look upon that sleeve; behold it well.

He loved me—O false wench!—Give't me again.

Dio. Whose was 't?

Cres. It is no matter, now I have 't again.

I will not meet with you to-morrow night:

I prithee, Diomed, visit me no more.

Ther. Now she sharpens: well said, whetstone!

Dio. I shall have it.

Cres. What, this?

Dio. Aye, that.

66. "keep this sleeve"; of course this is the sleeve that Troilus gave Cressida in the fourth scene of Act IV, when she gave him a glove in return. Probably it was such a sleeve as was anciently worn at tournaments; thus described in Spenser's View of the State of Ireland: "The deepe smocke sleive, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish, and is used yet in Barbary: and yet that should seeme rather to be an old English fashion; for in armory the fashion of the Manche, which is given in armes by many, being indeede nothing else but a sleive, is fashioned much like to that sleive. And that Knights in ancient times used to weare their mistresses or loves sleive upon their armes, appeareth by that which is written of Sir Launcelot, that he wore the sleive of the faire Maide of Asteloth in a tourney, whereat Queene Guenever was much displeased."—H. N. H.

Cres. O, all you gods! O pretty, pretty pledge!
Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainty kisses to it,
80
As I kiss thee. Nay, do not snatch it from me;
He that takes that doth take my heart withal.

Dio. I had your heart before; this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience.

Cres. You shall not have it, Diomed; faith, you shall not;

I 'll give you something else.

Dio. I will have this: whose was it?

Cres. It is no matter.

Dio. Come, tell me whose it was.

Cres. 'Twas one's that loved me better than you will.

But, now you have it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it? 90

Cres. By all Diana's waiting-women yond,

And by herself, I will not tell you whose.

Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm,

And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.

Tro. Wert thou the devil, and worest it on thy horn, It should be challenged.

Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past; and yet it is not;

I will not keep my word.

Dio. Why then, farewell;

Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.

Cres. You shall not go: one cannot speak a word, But it straight starts you.

Dio. I do not like this fool:

'Act V. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you Pleases me best.

Dio. What, shall I come? the hour?

Cres. Aye, come: O Jove! do come: I shall be plagued.

Dio. Farewell till then.

Cres. Good night: I prithee, come. [Exit Diomedes.

Troilus, farewell! one eye yet looks on thee,
But with my heart the other eye doth see.
Ah, poor our sex! this fault in us I find,
The error of our eye directs our mind:

What error leads must err; O, then conclude Minds sway'd by eyes are full of turpitude.

112. In the foregoing dialogue we trace very distinctly the Poet's reading of Chaucer, who tells the story with great sweetness and pathos in the fifth Book of his poem. Our quotation must stop with these four stanzas:

"The morrow came, and, ghostly for to speke, This Diomede is come unto Creseide; And shortly, least that ye my tale breke, So well he for himselfe spake and seide, That all her sighes sore doune he leide; And finally, the soothe for to saine, He refte her the great of all her paine.

And eke, the bet from sorow him to releve,

Ulyss.

Why stay we then?

Tro. To make a recordation to my soul

Of every syllable that here was spoke. But if I tell how these two did co-act, Shall I not lie in publishing a truth? Sith yet there is a credence in my heart,

An esperance so obstinately strong, That doth invert the attest of eyes and ears;

Ulyss. Nor mine, my lord: Cressid was here but now.

Tro. Let it not be believed for womanhood!

Think, we had mothers; do not give advantage
To stubborn critics, apt without a theme 131
For depravation, to square the general sex
By Cressid's rule: rather think this not Cressid.

Ulyss. What hath she done, prince, that can soil our mothers?

Tro. Nothing at all, unless that this were she.

Ther. Will a' swagger himself out on 's own eyes?

Tro. This she? no, this is Diomed's Cressida:

If beauty have a soul, this is not she; If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctimonies, If sanctimony be the gods' delight, 140 If there be rule in unity itself, This is not she. O madness of discourse. That cause sets up with and against itself! Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt Without perdition, and loss assume all reason Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid! Within my soul there doth conduce a fight Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparate Divides more wider than the sky and earth; And yet the spacious breadth of this division 150 Admits no orifex for a point as subtle As Ariachne's broken woof to enter. Instance, O instance! strong as Pluto's gates; Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven: Instance, O instance! strong as heaven itself:

141. "If there be rule in unity itself"; if one is one.—C. H. H.

The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolved and loosed;

And with another knot, five-finger-tied,

The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,

The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy relics Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd

With that which here his passion doth express?

Tro. Aye, Greek; and that shall be divulged well

In characters as red as Mars his heart

Inflamed with Venus: never did young man fancy

With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek: as much as I do Cressid love,

So much by weight hate I her Diomed:

That sleeve is mine that he'll bear on his helm:

Were it a casque composed by Vulcan's skill, 170

My sword should bite it: not the dreadful spout

Which shipmen do the hurricano call,

Constringed in mass by the almighty sun,

Shall dizzy with more clamor Neptune's ear

In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his concupy.

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false!

Let all untruths stand by thy stained name, And they'll seem glorious.

162. "doth express"; "Can Troilus really feel, on this occasion, half of what he utters?" A question suitable to the calm Ulysses.—H. N. H.

177. "concupy"; a cant word for concupiecence.—H. N. H.

Act V. Sc. ii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Ulyss. O, contain yourself; 180 Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter Æneas.

*Ene. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord: Hector by this is arming him in Troy;

Ajax your guard stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince. My courteous lord, adieu.

Farewell, revolted fair! and, Diomed, Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head! Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates. Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exeunt Troilus, Eneas, and Ulysses.
Ther. Would I could meet that rogue Diomed! 190
I would croak like a raven; I would bode, I would bode. Patroclus will give me any thing for the intelligence of this whore; the parrot will not do more for an almond than he for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery! still wars and lechery! nothing else holds fashion. A burning devil take them! [Exit.

<sup>185. &</sup>quot;Have with you"; I'll go with you.-C. H. H.

<sup>187. &</sup>quot;wear a castle on thy head"; that is, defend thy head with armor of more than common security. So in the History of Prince Arthur, 1634: "Do thou thy best, said Sir Gawaine; therefore hie thee fast that thou wert gone, and wit thou well we shall soon come after, and breake the strongest castle that thou hast upon thy head." It appears that a kind of close helmet was called a castle.—H. N. H.

Scene III

Troy. Before Priam's palace.

Enter Hector and Andromache.

'And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,

To stop his ears against admonishment? Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in:

By all the everlasting gods, I'll go!

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.

Hect. No more, I say.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector? And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent.

6. "My dreams"; that is, my dreams of the night forebode ill to the day.—The incident is thus related in Caxton's History: "Andromeda saw that night a marvellous vision, and her seemed, if Hector went that day to the battle, he should be slaine. And she, that had great fear and dread of her husband, weeping said to him, praying that he would not go to the battle that day: whereof Hector blamed his wife, saying that she should not believe nor give faith to dreams, and would not abide nor tarry therefore." Shakespeare was familiar, no doubt, with Chaucer's brief account in The Nonnes Preestes Tale:

"Lo, hire Andromacha, Hectores wif,
That day that Hector shulde lese his lif,
She dremed on the same night beforne
How that the lif of Hector shuld be lorne,
If thilke day he went into bataille:
She warned him, but it might not availle;
He went forth for to fighten natheles,
And was yslain anon of Achilles."—H. N. H.

'Act V. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Consort with me in loud and dear petition;
Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd 10
Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night
Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O, 'tis true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound!

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Be gone, I say: the gods have heard me swear.

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows: They are polluted offerings, more abhorr'd Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O, be persuaded! do not count it holy
To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,
For we would give much, to use violent thefts
And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow; But vows to every purpose must not hold: Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;
Mine honor keeps the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds dear; but the dear man
Holds honor far more precious-dear than life.

Enter Troilus.

How now, young man! mean'st thou to fight today?

20-21. "as lawful, For we would give much, to use violent thefts"; Tyrwhitt's conj.; Ff. read, "as lawfull: For we would count give much to as violent thefts."—I. G.

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade. 30 [Exit Cassandra.

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth:

I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry:

Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,

And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.

Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy, I'll stand to-day for thee and me and Troy.

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you, Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecian falls, 40 Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword, You bid them rise and live.

Hect. O, 'tis fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

Hect. How now! how now!

Tro. For the love of all the gods,

Let's leave the hermit pity with our mother;

And when we have our armors buckled on,

The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords, Spur them to ruthful work, rein them from ruth!

Hect. Fie, savage, fie!

Tro. Hector, then 'tis wars.

S7, 38. "vice of mercy . . . fits a lion"; the traditions and stories of the darker ages abounded with examples of the lion's generosity. Upon the supposition that these acts of clemency were true, Troilus reasons not improperly, that to spare against reason, by mere instinct and pity, became rather a generous beast than a wise man.—H. N. H.

'Act V. Sc. iii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?

51

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire; Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees, Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears; Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,

Opposed to hinder me, should stop my way, But by my ruin.

Re-enter Cassandra, with Priam.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay, 60
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,
Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back:
Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions:

Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt, To tell thee that this day is ominous: Therefore, come back.

Hect. Æneas is afield;

And I do stand engaged to many Greeks, Even in the faith of valor, to appear This morning to them.

Pri. Aye, but thou shalt not go. 70 Hect. I must not break my faith.

You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir, Let me not shame respect; but give me leave To take that course by your consent and voice, Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam. Cas. O Priam, yield not to him!

And. Do not, dear father.

Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you: Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

Exit Andromache.

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O, farewell, dear Hector! 80 Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!

Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents! Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out! How poor Andromache shrills her dolors forth! Behold, distraction, frenzy and amazement, Like witless antics, one another meet, And all cry 'Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!'

78. "get you in"; the Destruction of Troy continues the story thus: "In the morning Andromeda went to the king Priamus, and to the queene, and told them the verity of her vision, and prayed them with all her heart, that they would do so much at her request as to dissuade Hector, that he should not in any wise that day go to the battle. It happened that the day was faire and clear, and the Trojans armed them, and Troylus issued first into the battle; after him Eneas. And the king Priamus sent to Hector, that he should keepe him well that day from going to battle. Wherefore Hector was angry, and said to his wife many reproachful words, as that he knew well that this commandment came by her request: yet, notwithstanding the forbidding, he armed him. At this instant came the queene Hecuba, and the queene Helen, and the sisters of Hector, and kneeled down presently before his feet, and prayed him with weeping tears that he would do off his harness, and come with them into the hall: but never would he do it for their prayers. but descended from the palace, and tooke his horse, and would have gone to battle. But at the request of Andromeda the king Priamus came running anon, and tooke him by the bridle, and said to him so many things of one and other, that he made him to return, but in no wise would he be made to unarm him."-H. Cas. Farewell: yet, soft! Hector, I take my leave:
Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. 90

Go in and cheer the town: we'll forth and fight,
Do deeds worth praise and tell you them at

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about thee!

[Exeunt, severally Priam and Hector. Alarum. Tro. They are at it, hark! Proud Diomed, believe, I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter come from yond poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whoreson tisick, a whoreson rascally tisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o' these days: and I have a rheum in mine eyes too, and such an ache in my bones that, unless a man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on 't. What says she there?

Tro. Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart;

The effect doth operate another way.

The field between Troy and the Grecian camp.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter Thersites.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another; I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet, Diomed, has got that same scurvy doting foolish young knave's sleeve of Troy there in his helm: I would fain see them meet; that that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain, with the sleeve, back to the dissembling luxurious drab, of a sleeveless errand. O' the 10 t'other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals, that stale old mouse-eaten dry cheese, Nestor, and that same dog-fox, Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry. They set me up in policy that mongrel cur,

Soft! here comes sleeve, and t'other.

Tro. Fly not, for shouldst thou take the river Styx, I would swim after.

Dio. Thou dost miscall retire:

I do not fly; but advantageous care Withdrew me from the odds of multitude: Have at thee!

Enter Hector.

Hect. What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hector's match?

Art thou of blood and honor?

Ther. No, no: I am a rascal; a scurvy railing knave; a very filthy rogue.

19. "proclaim barbarism"; to set up the authority of ignorance, and to declare that they will be governed by policy no longer.— H. N. H.

25. "advantageous care"; concern to secure a favorable position for fighting.—C. H. H.

And am her knight by proof.

And in Melvil's Memoirs: "The laird of Grange offered to fight Bothwell, who answered that he was neither earl nor lord, but a baron; and so was not his equal. The like answer made he to Tullibardine. Then my Lord Lindsay offered to fight him, which he could not well refuse; but his heart failed him, and he grew cold on the business."—H. N. H.

Enter Agamemnon.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamas
Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margarelon
Hath Doreus prisoner,
And stands colossus-wise, waving his beam,
Upon the pashed corses of the kings 10
Epistrophus and Cedius: Polyxenes is slain;
Amphimachus and Thoas deadly hurt;
Patroclus ta'en or slain; and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful sagittary
Appals our numbers: haste we, Diomed,
To reinforcements, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles,
And bid the snail-paced Ajax arm for shame.
There is a thousand Hectors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathe his horse,
And there lacks work; anon he 's there afoot,
And there they fly or die, like scaled sculls
Before the belching whale; then is he yonder,
And there the strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
Fall down before him, like the mower's swath:
Here, there and every where he leaves and takes,
Dexterity so obeying appetite

That what he will he does, and does so much That proof is call'd impossibility.

Enter Ulysses.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles
Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance:
31

Patroclus' wounds have roused his drowsy blood, Together with his mangled Myrmidons,

That noseless, handless, hack'd and chipp'd, come to him,

Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend, And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it, Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day Mad and fantastic execution, Engaging and redeeming of himself, With such a careless force and forceless care.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! [Exit. Dio. Aye, there, there. Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Achil. Where is this Hector?

Come, come, thou boy-queller, show thy face;

Ajax. What wouldst thou?

Dio. I would correct him.

Ajax. Were I the general, thou shouldst have my office

Ere that correction. Troilus, I say! what, Troilus!

Enter Troilus.

Tro. O traitor Diomed! Turn thy false face, thou traitor,

And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse. Dio. Ha, art thou there?

Ajax. I'll fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.

Dio. He is my prize; I will not look upon.

Tro. Come both, you cogging Greeks; have at you both! [Exeunt, fighting.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O, well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now do I see thee; ha! have at thee, Hector! Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan:
Be happy that my arms are out of use:
My rest and negligence befriends thee now,
But thou anon shalt hear of me again;
Till when, go seek thy fortune.

[Exit.

Hect. Fare thee well:

I would have been much more a fresher man, 20

Had I expected thee.

Re-enter Troilus.

How now, my brother!

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas: shall it be?

No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,
He shall not carry him; I'll be ta'en too,
Or bring him off. Fate, hear me what I say!
I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.

Enter one in sumptuous armor.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark.

No? wilt thou not? I like thy armor well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Wilt thou not, beast, abide?

Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide.

Another part of the field.

Enter Achilles, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons;
Mark what I say. Attend me where I wheel:
Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath:

And when I have the bloody Hector found, Empale him with your weapons round about; In fellest manner execute your aims. Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye: It is decreed Hector the great must die. [Exeunt.

The bull has the game: ware horns, ho!

Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.

Ther. I am a bastard too: I love bastards: I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valor, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take 20 heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment: farewell, bastard.

[Exit.]

Mar. The devil take thee, coward!

SCENE VIII

Another part of the field. Enter Hector.

Hect. Most putrefied core, so fair without, Thy goodly armor thus hath cost thy life.

23. "bastard," in ancient times, was not a disreputable appellation. See 1 Henry VI, Act I, sc. ii.—H. N. H.

1. Of course, this "most putrefied core" is the "one in sumptuous armour," at the close of scene v. The incident was taken from Caxton's History: "When Achilles saw that Hector slew thus the nobles of Greece, and so many other that it was marvel to behold, he thought that if Hector were not slain the Greeks would never have victory. And forasmuch as he had slain many kings and princes, he ran upon him marvellously; but Hector cast to him a dart fiercely, and made him a wound in his thigh; and then Achilles issued out of the battle, and did bind up his wound, and took a great spear in purpose to slay Hector, if he might meet him. Among all these things Hector had taken a very noble baron of Greece, that was quaintly and richly armed, and, for to lead him out of the host at his ease, had cast his shield behind him at his back, and had left his breast discovered; and as he was in this point, and took none heed of Achilles, he came privily unto him, and thrust his spear within his body, and Hector fell down dead to the ground."-H. N. H.

Act V. Sc. viii. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath:

Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death.

[Puts off his helmet and hangs his shield behind him.

Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set; How ugly night comes breathing at his heels: Even with the vail and darking of the sun, To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd; forego this vantage, Greek. Achil. Strike, fellows, strike; this is the man I seek.

[Hector falls.

So, Ilion, fall thou next! now, Troy, sink down! Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone. 12 On, Myrmidons; and cry you all amain, 'Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.'

A retreat sounded.

Hark! a retire upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth.

And stickler-like the armies separates.

My half-supp'd sword that frankly would have fed,

Pleased with this dainty bait, thus goes to bed. [Sheathes his sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;
Along the field I will the Trojan trail.

[Exeunt. A retreat sounded.

SCENE IX

Another part of the field.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and the rest, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that? Nest. Peace, drums!

[Within] 'Achilles! Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!'

Dio. The brute is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be;

Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam. March patiently along: let one be sent

To pray Achilles see us at our tent.

If in his death the gods have us befriended, Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended. [Execut, marching. 10]

Tro. Hector is slain.

Act V. Sc. x. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

All. Hector! The gods forbid!

Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail

In beastly sort dragg'd through the shameful field.

Frown on, you heavens, effect your rage with speed!

Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy! I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy, And linger not our sure destructions on!

Enc. My lord, you do discomfort all the host. 10

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death,
But dare all imminence that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Hector is gone:
Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?
Let him that will a screech-owl aye be call'd,
Go in to Troy, and say there 'Hector's dead:'
There is a word will Priam turn to stone,
Make wells and Niobes of the maids and wives,
Cold statues of the youth, and, in a word,
Scare Troy out of itself. But march away:
Hector is dead; there is no more to say.
Stay yet. You vile abominable tents,
Thus proudly pight upon our Phrygian plains,
Let Titan rise as early as he dare,
I'll through and through you! and thou greats

I'll through and through you! and, thou greatsized coward,

No space of earth shall sunder our two hates: I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still, That moldeth goblins swift as frenzy's thoughts. Strike a free march to Troy! with comfort go:

Tro. Hence, broker-lackey! ignomy and shame Pursue thy life, and live aye with thy name!

Pan. A goodly medicine for my aching bones!
O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised! O traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set a-work, and how ill requited! why should our endeavor be so loved and the performance so loathed? what 40 verse for it? what instance for it? Let me see:
